The enemies of truth are mustering their forces against us, but those who are founded on the rock have nothing to fear, and we serve a God who can control the elements, and make even the "wrath of man to praise him." We feel determined, by God's grace, to gird ourselves for the conflict, combat manfully for the truth, and "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints."

The evening of the day on which campmeeting closed, Bro. E. Burnham was here and spoke in Humphrey Hall to a large audience. He replied to the Methodist minister of this place, who, the day before, had in the most bitter manner attacked us as a people, on faith and views. There is quite a stir among the people, and many are desirous of hearing Bro. B. again, concerning these things. I trust they will have an opportunity to do so.

We need laborers of the right stamp now, and trust that God's servants will remember us, and not pass us by. Be assured our hearts and houses are open to receive you in the name of the Lord.

Yours in good hope,

EVENING TOKENS

BY ELDER S. S. BREWER

The dark gloomy night of sorrow and sadness
Is rapidly fleeing and soon will be gone;
My heart is pulsating with joy and with gladness,
I long for the morn of fair Zion to dawn.
No longer in doubt hang thy harp on the willow,
Attune it anew to thy soon coming King;
My poor pilgrim brother, though toss'd on Time's billow,
The faithful to glory soon Jesus will bring.

Soon the heavens will open and with myriads descending,
Our King the Redeemer will come from above;
Then borne on bright pinions, with angels ascending,
We'll bathe in the ocean of eternal love.
O hail thou fair day of eternal redemption!
We pray and we watch for the morning to break;
We wait for our King who will bring us salvation,
And all the dead saints immortal awake.

The last lingering call of mercy's declining,
The signs are portentous, the Kingdom is nigh;
The last beams of light from God's word is shining,—
O friends, all awake, the Judgment draws nigh!
Ah, poor careless sinner, now Jesus is calling,
O come to the Savior and thou shalt be blest;
O come as the last sands of old time are falling;
O come, ere he swear thou shalt not enter his rest.

Angels.

A DISCOURSE, BY WM. SHEPHERD.

3. The relations which the angels sustain toward God and man in the scheme of human redemption—the important position they at present occupy—the character of their work in this dispensation. The relations which those intelligences sustain—the high responsibilities devolving upon, and the multiplied duties they perform in the work of redemption, we presume to say, are but little known, and less appreciated; this even by those who are the happy recipients of the divine grace—the favored subjects of their blessed ministrations, guardian care and solicitude. But few are aware of the multiplicity, extent, majesty and power of the unnumbered host of these heavenly beings employed to rescue man from the ruins of the fall, and restore him and earth to its natal beauty,—a fallen and perishing race, in regard to which there is not a holy intelligence existing in the most remote dominions of Jehovah but what feels more or less interested in, and engaged in some way respecting their recovery from death and destruction. And this is the case more especially now, above all other periods, when we have approximated so near the grand crisis when all the powers, for and against, will be arrayed and brought into terrific action for the world's final deliverance from the power of sin and Satan, and "the Conflict of Ages" decided at once and forever.

The Apostle, in speaking of the Lord Jesus in connection with all created powers, over which he is the exalted Head, observes,—"Whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers;" all created things, "in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible; . . . he is before all things, and by him all things consist." He is the head of all principality and power; "and every name that is named, not only in this world, (or age,) but also in that which is to come; and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." Col. 1 : 16–19 : Eph. 1 : 20–23. The expression—"put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the Church"—imports that all these forces and powers are made entirely subservient to God's gracious will, and are all brought to bear in the formation, perfection and glorification of the Church.

Some men may enter an extensive factory; woolen, cotton or silk, for instance, where these raw materials are elaborated into the finest of wearing apparel; there is a vast amount of machinery in action, and the article manufactured passes rapidly through a number of hands and branches before it is completed by the artist. They only take a superficial survey, and do not examine, perhaps, only that part where the fabric is finished. They admire it, and the skill of the manufacturer as it emanates from this last process, not acquainted with the many it had previously gone through, and the variety of hands who contributed their part in order to its completion. So it is in the grand contrived scheme of human redemption. Few form any where near a proximate idea of the vast and multiform machinery which is in constant motion, and designed by the great Architect of the universe to save mankind from ruin and death, and a world from returning to its worse than chaotic state. Yes, few conceive the important position which the holy angels of God occupy in this grand and complicated machinery, which we shall make fully to appear as we proceed.

It was an angel that appeared unto Zachariah in the temple, as he was officiating in his priestly capacity,—burning incense upon the altar—who apprized him of the fact that his prayer was heard, that his wife Elizabeth should bear him a son, whose name should be called John, and that he should have joy and gladness; and that many should rejoice at his birth; that he should be filled with the Holy Ghost even from his mother's womb, and turn many of the children of Israel to the Lord their God. Luke 1 : 5–16. The same was sent to Mary at Nazareth in Galilee, who saluted her thus:—"Hail, thou that art highly favored; the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women." Then revealed he the fact to the joy of her heart, that she should conceive and bring forth a son, and call his name Jesus, who should be designated "the Son of the Highest," to whom the Lord God would ultimately give the throne of his father David, to reign or rule over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there should be no end. Luke 1 : 26–33. The birth of this divine child is first announced by them to some obscure and humble "shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you, ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling-clothes, lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host,"—singing an appropriate anthem in honor of the event, making the air harmonious with their exquisite music—music which will never be surpassed until this divine babe shall come forth as the apocalyptic "Man Child, who shall rule all nations with a rod of iron;" (Luke 2 : 8–15.) after which they departed "into heaven."

"Hark! the herald angels sing
Glory to the new born King,
Peace on earth and mercy mild;
God and sinners reconciled!
Joyful, all ye nations rise,
Join the triumph of the skies:
With the angelic host proclaim—
Christ is born in Bethlehem!"

Observe, "not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called. But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise . . . the weak . . . and base things of the world, and things which are despised hath God chosen . . . to bring to nought things that are." And here we have a striking illustration of this. God commissions his angels to first announce the advent of the world's Redeemer, not to the rich, the mighty, or affluent and powerful of the earth, but to some obscure shepherds, while engaged in the humble duties of "feeding their flocks by night." But we return.

An angel warns Joseph and Mary to flee into Egypt with the "young child," from the face of the enraged Herod, who sought to slay it. Another, after Herod's death, directs their return, saying, "Arise and take the young child and his mother, and go into the land of Isael, for they are dead which sought the young child's life." Matt. 2 : 13–20. One refreshes Christ in the wilderness after his severe conflict with Satan. "Then the devil leaveth him, and behold angels came and ministered unto him." Matt. 4 : 11. And here it is worthy of remark, that with this trying interview of our Lord with the enemy, as you will find recorded in Matt. 4 : 6, the devil himself acknowledges that God gives his children in charge of the angels, as quoted from the Psalms. In the mental agonies of Jesus in the garden, we learn that "There appeared an angel unto him, from heaven, strengthening him." Luke 22 : 43. Again, he rebukes his disciples for using carnal weapons in his defence; showing if it were necessary to them to defeat the aggressors, and in harmony with the divine purpose to then triumph—"Thinkest thou that I could not (or would not) now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me (for aid) more than twelve legions of angels?" in order to accomplish the same; but no, for how could that purpose be carried out, and the scriptures fulfilled? Matt. 26 : 53; Luke 24; 25, 26, 44–46. They doubtless were present at his crucifixion, and were in part instrumental in producing those wonderful phenomena in nature which occurred at that event, attesting the truth of his divine parentage as expressed at the time by the conscience-stricken Roman—"Surely this was the Son of God!" They are discovered at his tomb, after his resurrection, described as with a countenance "like lightning," and clothed in "raiment white as snow," speaking kindly and comforting those women who so affectionately clung to him and followed him through all his sufferings, and who like "Mary stood without the sepulchre," saying to them, "Fear not, ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus which was crucified. He is not here; for he is risen, as he said. Come see the place where the Lord lay;" requesting them to go quickly "and tell his disciples" the important fact that Christ indeed had risen from the dead. Matt. 28 : 1–7. They accompanied him, we may reasonably infer, in his triumphant ascension to his mediatorial seat at the right hand of God,—

Cherubic legions guard him home,
And shout him, "Welcome to the skies."

While two shining ones in white apparel are found in the midst of the sorrowing disciples, as they are anxiously "gazing up into heaven" immediately subsequent to their Lord's departure thence, who consoles the little group, with the important truth that, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner, as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1 : 9–11. We cannot here refrain from the remark, that here the so much stigmatized, rejected, though glorious doctrine of Messiah's second advent, is preached for the first time after his ascension, by the holy angels of God.

It was a celestial one which imparted and gave those peculiar properties to the waters of the pool of Bethesda; he descended "at a certain time," directly after which whosoever then first "stepped in was made whole of whatsoever disease he had." John 5 : 4. They are frequently described as being engaged in chanting holy anthems to the glorious Jehovah. Isa. 6 : 8; Luke 2 : 13, 14; Rev. 7 : 11, 12. The Psalmist thus invites them: "Bless the Lord ye his angels that excel in strength;" "Praise ye him all his angels." Ps. 103 : 40; 148 : 2. Two of the Ambassadors of Christ are liberated from the common prison by one of these heavenly functionaries—"the angel of the Lord," who "commanded" (observe with what authority they are invested, as here indicated,) them to "Go; stand and speak in the temple to the people, all the words of this life." Acts 5 : 19, 20. Peter's deliverance from prison by the answer of concerted prayer, is effected through the agency of an angel.—"And behold the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined on the prison; and he smote Peter on the side and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands. And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, and bind on thy sandals; . . . cast thy garments about thee and follow me." And the apostle was fully conscious of this too, from what he observes,—"Now I know of a surety that the Lord hath sent his angel, and hast delivered me out of the hand of Herod." And when he had arrived "at the house of Mary the mother of John," where they were still engaged in prayer, he "knocked at the door of the gate," and a damsel came out in answer, and recognizing Peter's voice, "she opened not the gate for gladness," but ran to inform his friends. They at first could not credit it; she persisted that it was so. "Then said they it is his angel." Acts 12 : 7–15.

Now this teaches us the fact in conjunction with other scriptures, to which we shall presently come, that every child of God has his guardian angels, in number more or less according as their circumstances and calling may need. This is Bible doctrine, and should be no less consoling than it is true to the humble followers of Jesus. St. Paul firmly believed in the ministration and presence of these heavenly ones: for in giving his solemn charge to Timothy concerning preaching, he not only mentions "God and the Lord Jesus Christ" as taking cognizance of the imposition of the laying on of his hands, but would also enforce the solemnity of the occasion, and impress the youthful Evangelist with the importance of the vows which he was now about to take upon him, by reminding him of other eye witnesses to the scene, even "the elect angels." 1 Tim. 5 : 21; see Ecc. 5 : 5, 6. And he seemed perfectly sensible of their constant presence, from what he writes to the church at Corinth;—"For God hath set forth us, the apostles, last, as it were appointed to death; for we are made a spectacle unto the world, to angels, and to men." 1 Cor. 4 : 9. It was one of these holy messengers who dispelled his fears and bid his sorrows cease while on his perilous voyage to Rome, when wrecked near the island of Melita. There was not a man of the whole ship's crew, but what despaired of being saved. "All hope that we should be saved," says the sacred narrator, "was then taken away;" but Paul stood forth comforting and exhorting them to "be of good cheer," as not one should be lost. "For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve, saying, Fear not, Paul; for thou must be brought before Cesar: and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee. Wherefore, Sirs, be of good cheer; for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me." Acts 28 : 21–25. This shows the important duties which the angels perform in the providence of God, and how they most especially accompany his ministers and people through all their labors and wearied pilgrimage of this life. Often are they sent with hope's unpinioned wings, and love's smiling face, (though invisible to mortal eye,) inspiring the heart to more fully confide in the Divine goodness and protection—coming in their sweet manifestations, and with gentle whisperings of hope, peace and joy in the hour of despair.

They are invariably present at religious assemblies, from what the apostle says in regard to the order of those assemblies—speaking of women, he affirms that it is improper for them to worship or pray with uncovered heads, "because of the angels." We do not know what the apostle means here, save it be, that for females to have their heads uncovered on such occasions, makes it a mark of indignity towards those celestial visitants. 1 Cor. 11 : 10.

One appears unto Cornelius the centurion, while engaged in his customary devotions, (for it is said he was a man who prayed to God alway,") who informed him, that his prayers and alms had "come up for a memorial before God;" instructing him what course to pursue in order to obtain the knowledge and blessings of salvation in harmony with God's plan,—important information it is too. See Acts 10. Philip the evangelist is directed by one to "Arise and go toward the South, unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is deserted," for the purpose of intercepting a certain Ethiopian who was on his way "to Jerusalem to worship," in order to enlighten his understanding,—unfolding to him the subject of the great salvation, and the only means through which it could be obtained. Acts 8 : 26–40. And why should it be to the contrary now? Are not "the servants of the Most High God," which are ordained to unfold "the way of life," often guided and directed by his angels to journey to certain places from time to time, particularly where there are known to abide those who are hungering and thirsting for the bread and waters of life; "who have ears to hear" and are desirous to be led into the experimental knowledge of the blessing of the gospel of Christ? Are they not all spirits of ministration sent forth to minister to those who are heirs of life? So the scriptures inform us. Angels are represented by Him "of whom the whole family in heaven and earth are named," as being deeply engaged and interested in the salvation of sinners, yea, very anxious and solicitous in their behalf. The following language renders this clear:—"There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." "Likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth." Luke 15 : 7, 10. Then it is not so visionary after all—the idea when exhorting sinners to repent while enforcing the truths of the gospel, to say in the language of the poet, that "Angels now are hovering round us,

Unperceived they mix the throng."

Waiting, as it were, to convey the glad tidings to heaven that another prodigal has returned to his Father's house—another lost one is found—another who was dead "is alive." It is true, the idea of their carrying the intelligence to heaven is based upon inferential evidence, but there is inferential testimony sometimes which is tantamount to positive and direct, which we think is in the case at point.

Again, our Lord cautions the persecutors of his Church, or "little ones," to beware how they "despise" and ill treat them, from the fact that "their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven. Matt. 18 : 10. This is language which denotes that constant and intimate intercourse ever existing between God and man, heaven and earth, through the blessed medium of his angelic host. We hear much said in these "last days" about "mediums" and "spiritual manifestations." Now here are mediums and spiritual communications which we thank the Lord for, and have no objection in the least to participate in such as are Scriptural, lawful, and such as our Heavenly Father designed for our eternal good. We have no "moving tables" here, however, and tricks of the most insignificant and ridiculous kind, only becoming the adept magicians and jugglers of the day—"spirits of demons," leading mankind by their "lying wonders" into infidelity, to the denial of the God that made them and his holy word—the gospel—which alone "is the power of God unto life to every one that believeth." But on the other hand, the effect of these heavenly mediums is seen in noble sentiment, dignified deportment, joined with the deepest humility. Their manifestations produce holy aspirations, sublime thoughts, generating a profound reverence for the Supreme Being, enabling us to more justly appreciate his works, impressing the mind with pleasing reflections, and leading it to contemplate "those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God;" while a deeper love, and stronger attachment is perfected for the Holy Volume of inspiration through their influence; do not let the thought seem wrong to indulge in, for we cannot believe that they come to earth, and visit the sons and daughters of men, as mere spectacles, empty-handed, as it were, without exerting an influence; for as well might we say of the sun, emerging from his oriental chambers and reaching his meridian hight without producing light and heat in this our hemisphere, as to suppose for a moment that the angels of heaven would ascend and descend to our world, mingling and communicating with the saints; visiting religious assemblies; being often present when the voice of prayer is heard, as in the case with the centurion; journeying with the christian pilgrims, as in the case of Paul and Philip, and yet not prove instrumental in producing light and heat, yea, kindling an intense flame of holy ardor and divine love in the hearts of all the humble and devoted children of God. See Isa. 6 : 6, 7; Ezek. 10 : 2, 6; Rev. 10 : 1; 14 : 8; 18 : 1. We conceive them as forming that sublime and indestructible CABLE which in the mystery of the Holy Ghost beautifully and indissolubly connects "Christ and the Church." This is figuratively expressed by the Apostle,—a "hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest forever, after the order of Melchisedec." Heb. 6 : 19, 20.

(To be concluded.)

From Sr. L. J. Beach.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I feel like writing a few lines for the Crisis, and the more so, as I have no evil report to bring, or sad tidings to communicate; but on the contrary that which will cause you to rejoice, as I know you ever do, in the prosperity of the children of God.

The Lord is truly blessing the little flock in this place, who are looking for the appearing of Jesus, filling our hearts with gladness, and uniting us together in love. Verily the Lord is faithful to perform what he hath promised, and to answer the prayers of his children who have long cried unto him.

The meeting at Collinsville was a blessed one, as all know who were there; and I presume that to none has it proved a greater blessing than to our little church in New Britain. I feel to praise God for the good fruit that now appears, and I trust will yet be manifest to all around us. Some feel more like consecrating themselves to God and his service than for years before, and are rejoicing in the liberty of the gospel,—that freedom which Christ and his truth only can impart; and nearly all seem striving to get nearer the Lord, and to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

Our meetings have been refreshing to the pilgrim's heart, as we have communed together of the things of God, the blessed way of life and salvation, and contemplated future joys in the Kingdom of God. We have known what the Apostle meant when he speaks of "sitting together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."

The enemies of truth are mustering their forces against us, but those who are founded on the rock have nothing to fear, and we serve a God who can control the elements, and make even the "wrath of man to praise him." We feel determined, by God's grace, to gird ourselves for the conflict, combat manfully for the truth, and "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints."

The evening of the day on which campmeeting closed, Bro. E. Burnham, was here and spoke in Humphrey Hall to a large audience. He replied to the Methodist minister of this place, who, the day before, had in the most bitter manner attacked us as a people, on faith and views. There is quite a stir among the people, and many are desirous of hearing Bro. B. again concerning these things. I trust they will have an opportunity to do so.

We need laborers of the right stamp now, and trust that God's servants will remember us, and not pass us by. Be assured our hearts and houses are open to receive you in the name of the Lord.

Yours in good hope,

For the Crisis.

A Hole in the Net.

You don't see any body converted? Don't catch men—fish faithfully, but somehow, always have "fisherman's luck." Can't tell what the matter is? Well, perhaps I can. I have been troubled that way myself. I think on the whole, there's probably a hole in your net. You have got the outlines all laid good and square. Truth and theory enough to save all creation, and the folks believe it too, and you think you shall certainly have a big haul, but at last, the net comes ashore without a fish.

But here, you look at the net and see how it works. Here is a thread gone; it was broken out when Deacon Tipsy got to drinking rum, and you did n't dare to haul him up to the gospel mark, for fear you'd lose his dollar in the contribution box, and so you left the net with a hole torn through it big enough for all the rummies in town to step through it. Ah, man, you never can catch fish with a hole in your net like that.

But, look, here's another—the place where Squire Fatpurse got through, when he cheated his neighbor so in that trade he made last year. You didn't feel called upon to draw the sword of the Spirit, and strike at the evil with all your might, and so for fear that you would mad the Squire, or his fashionable wife, or put his pretty daughter in the choir to pouting, and so the whole family give up their seat in the church, and hire one in the house of Dr. Smoothspeech, over the way, you have left that great hole in your net, where all the thieves, swindlers, and defaulters of all kinds slip through; and you never can catch one of them till you mend your net.

But hold,—here's another, where brother Fiery broke out, when he got talking with Mr. Heterodox about "the glorious truth," and got so mad that his red face looked almost like a comet, and he jawed and almost swore, and because Bro. Fiery belonged to your side of the question, you couldn't tell him the plain truth, and teach him in meekness to instruct them that oppose themselves, and so you left your net with a hole in it so big, that you can't catch a single fish of the whole peppercorn tribe. They are all as good as Bro. Fiery, and he is in good and regular standing in the church over which you, my dear sir, preside, and in which you vainly attempt to be a "fisher of men."

Stop, I have n't got through, beg your pardon; here's another hole in the net, that you tore, my reverend friend, when you took a glass of —— in that low grogery yonder, and came out with a cigar in your mouth. "It wasn't ——." Well, I don't care what it wasn't or what it was,—it was a place where you had no business to be, and, sir, the hole you made in your net then, lets through half the loafers and topers in town, including a score or two of beer-guzzling, tobacco-smoking vagabonds, who say they don't need any converting because they're as good as the parson, any how.

This isn't all: I reckon you made another pretty sizable hole in your net, when you dove into politics—hallooed yourself hoarse, swung your hat until the rim was loose, made a political speech in favor of some nabob, and for the benefit of some office-hunter, got well cheered, imagined yourself for a moment to be some great one, w ked up next morning feeling as if you had eaten a belly full of husks, and found yourself where you couldn't preach the straight gospel as you did before, and your net with a hole in it that would let all politicians through, big and little, if they only voted our ticket.

Then there was another hole made in your net—an awful tear, that it got when you stripped yourself and went through the tomfoolery of initiation, and joined the "lodge," with a herd of all sorts of your "brethren," some of them deacons, some rummies, some politicians, &c., &c., when you swore big oaths, drank wine, punch and toddy, passed "signs" and "grips," and became "brother" to about half the children that the devil ever had, went by the prayer meeting to attend the "lodge," as you had passed it before to attend the caucus.

Another hole, made when Mrs. Satin, the milliner, sent your wife that "love of a bonnet," all covered with ribbons and [illegible] Mrs. Pinkum was so kind as to give her that brass pin, and two or three other [illegible] as Hottentots wear round their heads, or in their ears and noses, before they are converted. For Mrs. Satin [illegible] would [illegible] man, thought it was all very well, and so when your wife wore the bonnet and the jewels, she broke through two or three passages of scripture, and made a hole in the net big enough to let Mrs. Flimsey with all her jewels, Mrs. Butterfly with her paint and gewgaws, Miss Splendor with her gorgeous apparel, Widow Dives (her husband is dead) with all her "purple and fine linen," and Miss Peacock with five hoops as a coach wheel;—and all the gay world besides, go right straight through the net without touching on either side. O man, you can't catch fish in such a hole-y net as this.

Then you tore another great hole in the net when you made that horse-trade, and another when you shaved Tom simple, and another when you didn't tell the plain truth about that other business, that had a little too much crook in it for an honest man. And through that particular hole in your net, all the horse-jockies, insolvents, bankrupt swindlers, and all sorts of other scamps, have been slipping every time you have drawn the net ever since.

Now you never can catch men with this net. No, SIR. They won't be caught thus—that's certain. Now the best thing you can do is, go and mend your net. Come out and confess your faults. Right all wrongs. Separate yourself from the world. Try to serve the Lord. Then bring the church to the line, and let them obey God or run. They'll do one or the other soon. Let Squire Fatpurse go to Dr. Smoothspeech's church, if he chooses, and you'll be better off without him than with him. Then go into the highways and by ways, and around all the dark pools of sin, and spread your net—be sure there isn't a hole in it—and then when it is spread, stir up the fish and haul them in. Keep at it, and you wont be complaining around about "toiling all night and catching nothing." Cast the net on the right side of the ship, sink it with solemn truth, float it with joyful hope, fasten it strongly to the stake of God's promise, and then take your sweep round again and again, and God will make you a successful fisher. Go, try it, and the great master will say "well done" at last. Behold, hear his voice:—"follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." Who will do it? For one, I go fishing; who will go also? Come, hurry up, the time is short.

For the Crisis.

The Time.

"There is . . . a time to every purpose;" and the time is a vital element, without which no purpose could be performed.

THE TIME given in several portions of prophecy is as essential as any part of the system of truth therein embraced.

THE CHART of Bro. Stevenson is about complete, and ready for illustrating the order and time of prophetic fulfillment. The age of Herod at his first command in Galilee and the death of Herod, the length and date of Augustus' reign and the date of his death, the inconsistencies in Josephus, and the correction of our received chronology reached by the facts of history and the statements of Holy Scripture, are given with a simplicity and clearness that none "can gainsay or resist," except as prejudice may sway the understanding. Thus I am compelled to conclude, with present light; but we are, we trust, open to correction, if there be a further correction still practicable. Nothing merely human is infallible in itself. We claim no light in ourselves as to this subject; or in our brother's diagram, save as it is derived from Scripture and facts. Those who seem ready to frown in advance, need to be reminded of the response of David to his older brothers,—"IS THERE NOT A CAUSE?"

The whole host of God's elect (engaged in the Advent movement at least) have been ridiculed, defied, and held at bay before the world on this vital point. We have been "laughed to scorn." They tauntingly say, Your "times have all passed, and every vision faileth" you! Now we say—LET THE PROOF appear; that the failure lies in the received adjustment of these dates! Then, if this be your fault, let others do better, as it is written,—"The wise shall understand!" Amen!

☞ When the Master is near his coming, I am sure it is safe for me to write over a new copy of my accounts, of the sins of nature, childhood, youth, riper years and old age. What if Christ have another written representation of me than I have of myself! Sure his is right; and if it contradict my mis-stated and sinfully erroneous account, ah, where am I then!

The Soul.—No. 2.

What is the soul? In our last, we presented to our readers some of the opinions of men, but now we wish to know, "what saith the Scripture?" The Bible must decide the question. The word nephesh, which is rendered soul, occurs seven hundred and fifty-two times in the Hebrew Scriptures, and is first found in Gen. 1: 20, and applied to beasts. "And God said, let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life," margin, "living soul." Heb. nephesh khayah, soul living, or living soul, as it is arranged in English. The second time the word occurs is in the 21st verse. "And God created great whales, and every living creature, (nephesh khayah, soul living,) that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly." We see from these scriptures, that all the animals of the sea are living souls. The third time the word nephesh occurs, is in Gen. 1: 24. "And God said, let the earth bring forth the living creature, (nephesh khayah, soul living,) after his kind, cattle, and creeping thing, and beast of the earth after his kind." From this passage, we learn that all the animals upon the earth are living souls.

Dr. Clark says, when commenting on this verse, "nephesh khayah" is "a general term to express all creatures endued with animal life, in any of its infinitely varied gradations." Nephesh next occurs in Gen. 1: 30. "And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to everything that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life, (nephesh khayah, margin, living soul,) I have given every green herb for meat."

We have now found nephesh, the word rendered soul, is applied to beasts, and all living animals in the first four instances where it is used in the Bible. This point should not be forgotten. We cannot dispute but that it is correctly used when thus applied. He who formed the animals knew best what to call them, and made no mistake when he named each a nephesh khayah, or living soul.

McCulloch says in his able work on the "Credibility of the Scriptures," "There is no word in the Hebrew language that signifies either soul or spirit, in the technical sense in which we use the terms, as implying something distinct from the body."—Cred. of Scrip. Vol. 2, p. 471.

The fifth use of nephesh is in Gen. 2: 7, which is its first application to man. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul, (nephesh khayah.) Here we have precisely the same words applied to man that we have found in the four passages already examined. Does nephesh khayah mean any more in Gen. 2: 7, than in 1: 20, 21, 24 and 30? If so, by what rule of exegesis? It is very evident that nephesh, in all the passages we have examined, represents the whole being, and not an immortal, spiritual existence, separate from the physical organism.

Kitto, in his "Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature, renders Gen. 2; 7, as follows: "And Jehovah God formed the man [Heb. the Adam,] dust from the ground, and blew into his nostrils the breath of life; and the man became a living animal."

Was this the beginning of man? If so, Plato and other heathen philosophers, as well as some modern teachers, are wrong. Kitto remarks of Gen. 2: 7, "We should be acting unfaithfully, if we were to affirm" that "an immortal spirit" is "contained or implied in this passage." Cyclo. Bib. Lit. Vol. 1, p. 59.

Bishop Tillotson says, "The immortality of the soul is rather supposed, or taken for granted, than expressly revealed in the Bible." This is a frank admission, but such an one as every unbiased individual must make after a thorough examination of the subject. Shall we found our faith upon a supposition, and one, too, which will lay a strong foundation for the support of the purgatory of the Catholics, their prayers to saints, Swedenborgianism, Shakerism, Spiritualism, and the doctrine of eternal misery; when, if the supposition be rejected, all these monstrous systems of error fall to the ground? or, in other words, are made to appear what they really are—"doctrines of devils?"

Truth.

O how precious is the truth of the Lord in these days. Spread it, spread it, in all directions. Let it shine. We are to be sanctified through the truth, and purified by obeying it. Buy it and sell it not, is the divine instruction. Gold is worthless when compared with it. Diamonds are but sand bank pebbles and lose all their lustre when contrasted with truth.

Some of our friends have expressed a fear that we should compromise the truth, that we might enjoy the good opinion of some. We should as soon think of tying a stone around our neck and diving into mid ocean. Compromise truth! Why it would be cutting ourselves off from the tree of life, and all hope of the coming kingdom. By the help of the Lord, we are determined to "stand up for Jesus" and his word, though dungeons, thumb screws, mauls, the rack, and faggot fires stare us in the face. We must do it or perish. If any would ask us what we include as truth in addition to simple faith in Jesus, we answer;—the sleep of the dead, the literal coming of Christ, the literal resurrection of the dead, the literal reign of Christ upon the earth renewed, and the final and eternal destruction of all the wicked. It seems as though these elements of truth were interwoven with every fibre of our being. We know not how we could feel stronger in our belief of these points of doctrine than we do.

For the Crisis.

The Love of Christ.

"May be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge." Eph. 3: 18, 19.

"The love of Christ" is an immeasurable and fathomless ocean. A voyager out at sea may in a measure comprehend the vastness of the world of waters spread out before his vision; yet he cannot discover its boundaries, nor fathom its depths. So is "the love of Christ;" there are breadths and lengths, heights and depths, which may be comprehended,—but eternity will reveal that it is so infinite that it "passeth knowledge." As the "waters above the firmament" seem to join in the horizon with "the waters under the firmament," constituting one vast, immeasurable sea above and below, so also is His love—

"Higher than the heights above,
Deeper than the depths beneath."

On the ocean, to the spectator, the sun appears to rise and set in the waters,—emerging from them, and sinking beneath them; so has "the Sun of Righteousness" arisen and set, in the boundless love of God, for a lost and ruined world; and will again arise in cloudless and everlasting day, never to go down. "Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended."

God the source of love.

"All the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full; unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again."

The current and channel of the regenerate heart is changed, and flows on in the broad stream of charity, love, and universal benevolence, which is supplied from the great source and fountain of all—the ocean of eternal love. As the rivers running into the sea receive their supply from the sea, by the evaporation of its waters, and form into clouds, which empty themselves upon the earth, filling the springs and streams which supply the rivers, and they return again their waters to the source from whence they come: so do believers receive from the great ocean of eternal love, the heavenly showers of divine grace and love, and return all again to the bosom and fountain of all good.

"Overwhelm me from above
Daily with thy boundless love."

God's ability to confer grace and glory upon the believer.

God is possessed of vast and inexhaustible resources. All the riches and treasures of the boundless material universe are His! Who can calculate them? But inconceivable and vast as they are, they do not surpass the treasures of His grace and glory. Those stores are able to supply, without lack, through time and eternity; and we have only to ask of Him large and full supplies, and He will confer upon us favors "above all that we are able to ask or think," both in this world and that which is to come.

The Crisis.

Dear Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad:—Will you suffer a word of exhortation, reproof and explanation in relation to matters connected with our paper, "The World's Crisis?" Some of you have done well, very well, in regard to it, and some of you have not done so well. Some of you have subscribed for it, paid your subscription, aided in getting subscribers, and in other relations helped matters along. Some of you have had a mind to do all this, and do it cheerfully, but you have not had the means. You are too poor. Very well—we cheerfully accept the will for the deed. But we are grieved to write that some of you have subscribed for it, and have received it for a long time without sending in the amount of your subscription, or without signifying that you are too poor to pay, or without letting us hear a word from you. Do you think this is kind and brotherly? Would you like to have the great Judge reckon with you, in the awful day, on the principle of, so it shall be done to you?

Is it generous to keep our Editor at work day and night, for your good, without any remuneration for his labor? Is it noble to let those who are no better able to pay for the paper and printing than you are, do the thing for you which every element of our religion requires that you should do for yourself? Is it not contrary to the rule, "as ye would that men should do to you so do ye to them," to act in the manner that you are doing? Perhaps you think the paper is not worth paying for! Why then do you continue to receive it? Why not send it right back, and done with it? All do not despise it. Some—yes, the most who receive it, think it the sweetest spirited religious paper in the world; and they would like what you do not pay for to go where it can do more good. We are not begging. Our paper sustains itself, amply, even if only a portion of our subscribers pay for it: but how can you think of doing so cruel a thing as to receive the labor of others for nothing? We are not in debt, and we do not wish to be, but if all should act like you, we must instantly stop the paper or get in debt. If on the other hand, all had paid up promptly, we should now have about a thousand dollars, clear of all expense, to devote to scattering light or the word of truth in various directions. We are now a little more than square, in our financial affairs, (and this is what but very few religious papers can say,) and now will you help us to keep so, and have something for the poor? Will you simply act the christian? Will you, I ask in the name of the New Testament, will you do right? If you are too poor, send us word, to the office, to that effect. If you will pay at some time, tell us when, and we will rest quiet. Come, let us prepare to meet our God!

Queries.

Will Bro. Brewer please answer the following questions?

1st. Which beast is to continue forty and two months, (or, as in the margin, make war,) the leopard or the two-horned beast? See Rev. 13: 5. "And there was given unto HIM a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given HIM to continue (margin make war,) forty and two months.—Ver. 7. "And it was given unto HIM to make war with the saints and overcome them."

2d. To whom does this him refer?

3d. Where is it written that the two-horned beast, that was to come up AFTER the leopard beast and exercise all the power of the FIRST beast BEFORE him, was to continue forty and two months?

4th. If the miracles (plural) of the two-horned beast* are simply claiming divine authority to burn heretics, what are the miracles of the false prophet or REV. 19: 20?	REV. 13: 13–14.

"And the beast was taken and with him the FALSE PROPHET that wrought miracles before HIM, with which he deceived them that received the mark of the beast and WORSHIPPED HIS IMAGE. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."	"And he [the TWO-horned BEAST] doeth great wonders [pl.] so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by MEANS of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an IMAGE TO THE BEAST."

THOUGHTS SUGGESTED ON PARTING WITH MY PASTOR.

I'm weary of this world of woe,
Its fading joys, its empty joy;
Its friendship-flower—earth's brightest boon,—
Must fade and die ere yet 'tis noon.

To meet a friend is scarcely dear,—
The joy is but a moment here;—
E'en while we greet the welcome hand,
A parting tear is at command.

Why should we love a child of earth?
Why give one better feelings birth?
Why plant affection in our heart
For sweetest flowers, since all must part?

I could not love save for that day,
When parting tears are wiped away;
Where all will share one common home,
And friend from friend no more shall roam.

I look not here for lasting rest,
But look for cares to fill my breast;
No gem have I in world's vain store,—
My all is found on Canaan's shore.

Hail, wished for day! dawn on our sight!
Banish these long-pent storms of night!
Come, Lord, and bid our toils be o'er,—
Let loved ones meet to part no more!

Promises to the Faithful.

When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3: 4.

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord: what a precious promise to all the faithful is here brought to light. And for our encouragement let us cite a few passages of God's word to magnify this truth.

1. Christ who is our life. "For the Lord himself SHALL (not may) descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

2. Our promises. "And will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." "He that overcometh SHALL inherit all things and I will be his God and he shall be my son." Precious promises; to be fulfilled when Christ who is our life shall appear. "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." "For yet a little while and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry."

Now, dear waiting ones, with the above precious promises, "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." And "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth." "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." And in view of these things, let us "exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." "But if the righteous are scarcely saved, where shall the sinner and ungodly appear?" So I would say to sinners of every grade, confess and forsake and he will have mercy. "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh," saying to those on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom;" while those on the left must hear the terrible sentence—"Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire." I say, repent now!

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Gerry, Chautauque Co., N. Y., Oct. 9, 1858, Bro. STEPHEN B. PRATT, aged 51 years.

Bro. Pratt's death was very sudden, supposed to be a disease of the heart. He leaves a wife and four children, and an aged mother, to mourn their loss, besides brothers and more distant relatives, and even the whole community.

In the death of Bro. Pratt, the infant cause of Bible truth has met with a very great loss. He was a consistent, every day, Bible christian. The glorious and sublime doctrine of the one God, one Mediator, one Gospel, one faith, one baptism, and one hope of life through Jesus alone, and the resurrection, has lost a bold advocate, and an able defender. Bro. Pratt was a man honored and respected in life, noble and beloved in death: supremely glorious and beautiful shall he be in the morning of the resurrection. Rest, brother, rest, until Jesus shall bid thee rise. We sorrow for thee, but not "as others which have no hope." "For we believe that Jesus died and rose again;" hence we expect to meet thee in Eden restored.

A discourse was delivered by the writer, on the occasion, from John 2: 25, 26, to a large, attentive and truly sympathizing congregation. C. W. LOW.

[Expositor please copy.]

Died, in Bridgeport, Ct., Oct. 15, Bro. P. W. BULKLEY, aged 47.

Bro. B. had been sick for about six months with dropsy of the chest; consequently, he has been liable to die at any moment. This he and his family were fully aware of, but when the fatal moment came, it took them all by surprise. He took his breakfast with an uncommon relish, arose from the table, walked a few steps and fell to the floor, and was a corpse in ten minutes. Thus it is our enemy, Death, will take us by surprise, even though we watch his movements continually.

Bro. B. was formerly a Methodist, but last spring he joined the little Advent church in Bridgeport, intending to be more faithful in his christian duties; but sickness immediately after shut him up from the assembly of his people.

Bro. B. leaves a wife and two children, who deeply mourn their loss; but they sorrow not as those that have no hope. They have the sympathies of a very large circle of friends and acquaintances. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, and a very great number of people listened with marked attention to the services of the occasion. May God bless the word spoken to the comfort of the afflicted and the good of all that heard. So "we are passing away." May Heaven pity us, and prepare us for a part in that first resurrection, upon which the second death can have no power. E. C.

Died, in East Guilford, Sept. 17th, after an illness of about five weeks, MARION LAMPERY, widow of the late John Lampery, aged 85 years, 4 months and 6 days.

Sister Lampery embraced religion some fifty years ago, and has sustained a religious life ever since. A funeral discourse was preached by the writer, from these words:—"I have fought good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

N. GLIDDEN.

Died, in Hartford, Ct., Oct. 13th, of typhoid fever, Mrs. M. E. CROWELL, wife of Elder E. Crowell, aged 37 years.

She was sick but eighteen days, when the cruel monster, Death, finished his work, and has left the hearts of her family and numerous friends bleeding over her grave.

O, that the time would soon come when we may sing,—

"O grave, where is thy victory?
O death, where is thy sting?"

We now feel the cruel sting of death, and the grave robs us of our fondest hopes.

THE REVIVAL IN INDIA.—A letter from Nellore, (Southern India) under date of May 18, renews and augments our wonder at the recent simultaneous burst of Divine influence all over the world. Ships far at sea, alone in mid-ocean, and solitary mission stations thousands of miles apart in the wastes of heathenism—all felt the universal influence at nearly the same moment, though entirely unconscious of each other's participation, while we were enjoying the work of God's power in the cities and villages of our happy American Christendom. At Nellore, a greatly increased seriousness was observed in February, and in March a day of fasting and prayer was observed. Soon several expressed a great desire for salvation, and have since become happy in Jesus. Eight natives had been baptized, five more were awaiting baptism, and the work was still going on. "Our principal work," says Mr. Douglas, "is making known of Jesus to the crowds of heathen."—Independent.

THE BIBLE A PROTESTANT TRACT.—A curious fact is pointed out in the Journal des Debats, France, that the right of distributing Bibles conceded to the Protesants by the treaty just concluded with China, is denied them in the French department of the Sarthe, where the prefect has just prohibited the circulation of the Bible, "and other Protestant tracts."

INQUIRING JEWS.—It is stated that in Germany scarcely a Jewish family is without some member who has been converted to Christianity. There is a great desire to inquire into the truths of the sacred Scripture, especially among the young.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF STEAMER ARIEL OFF CAPE RACE.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., Oct. 18.

The steamship Ariel, from Bremen and Havre, via Southampton Oct. 6th.

No improvement has as yet been made in working the Atlantic cable at Valentia.

The Submarine Telegraph Company has issued proposals for £150,000 additional capital, to lay two cables from Hull to Elbes, Hanover and Tonning, Denmark.

A meeting is to be held in Paris in reference to the Suez Canal in November next.

The amount of specie in the Bank of Austria is reported to be eleven millions sterling.

It is rumored that two French ships-of-war were at Lisbon, to demand restitution in the case of "Charles George."

The King of Denmark is ill.

Matters at Canton were in a most unsatisfactory state. The cholera had broken out among the Chinese soldiers.

Political advices by this arrival possess no feature of importance.

The London Times says that all appearances indicate that the present Cable must be given up, and hopes that the experience gained will be used to insure that success which is finally certain. It admits the great superiority of the Niagara over the Agamemnon, and thinks ships should be specially constructed for laying Cables.

THREE DAYS LATER.

ARRIVAL OF STEAMSHIP EUROPA.

HALIFAX, Oct. 20.

The royal mail steamship Europa, Capt. Leitch, from Liverpool 10.30 A. M. of 9th, arrived at this port at 12 o'clock last night.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Daily News has a hopeful article on the Atlantic Cable, and thinks it may yet be made available. It says:—"Prof. Thompson has nearly succeeded in neutralizing the effects of the earth current, which become so perplexing when currents through the cable are so weak. Prof. Hughes has so modified his printing apparatus that a current of voltaic electricity generated by a small iron wire being held in one hand, moistened with water, while a copper wire of equal size is held in the other, the two wires being united to form a circuit, is sufficient in intensity to make his machine print an intelligible message. So sensitive is his new instrument, that it will print correctly, though the current, weak as we have described it, is diminished still more in intensity by passing through the bodies of four individuals. With the combined improvements and inventions of Profs. Thompson and Hughes, and Mr. Henly, we are not without hope that as soon as their instruments can be conveyed across the Atlantic, electric communication will be once more restored."

LONDON, 9th.—The Daily News City Article says:—"Business throughout the stock exchange remains dull, and there is no general movement in prices. Steadiness generally prevails, but the late active demand for securities has subsided.

FRANCE.

The statement that two French men-of-war had gone to Tagus to support the demand of the French minister at Lisbon for compensation for seizure of the French vessel Charles Georges, while transmitting negroes to the West Indies, is confirmed.

The Emperor would remain at the camp in Chalons until the 10th of October.

The Times Paris correspondent says there is reason to hope that the difference between the French and Portuguese governments, respecting the seizure of the French barque Charles Georges, will be amicably arranged.

The Independent, of Turin, declares the visit of Prince Napoleon to Warsaw an event of great political importance, being, it thinks, the prelude of an alliance between France, Russia and Piedmont, hostile to Austria.

PRUSSIA.

Advices from Berlin state that the health of the King, which has been for some time getting worse, now gives cause for serious alarm.

FOUR DAYS LATER.

ARRIVAL OF THE PACIFIC AT ST. JOHNS, N. F.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., Oct. 21.

The propeller Pacific, of the Galway line, which left Galway at 6 A. M. on the 13th instant, arrived at this port at 1 o'clock this morning, bringing 280 passengers, among whom are Lord and Lady Bury and suite. She encountered heavy westerly gales.

News unimportant.

The cholera is said to have carried off 30,000 people in Mecca.

HUME, THE AMERICAN MEDIUM.—Accounts from Paris state that the spirits have done a handsome thing for Mr. Hume, the American medium, who has figured so largely in Paris, by way of lifting him into the good graces of the nobility. According to a Paris writer, he is engaged to Mlle. Kroll, sister-in-law of the Count Gregory Kouchelf-Besborodko, gentilhomme de la chambre of the Emperor of Russia, and will be married to her on the 13th of the present month. The intended of the medium is to be endowed by the Count, who, according to all accounts, does nothing by halves. He is said to have an income of four millions, and is never seen with less than twenty-four persons in his train. He has chateaux, lands, villages and villas, in every province of Russia, and counts armies of peasants. He has the reputation of making a benevolent and intelligent use of his money, and is said to be a liberal patron of art. He always has with him a painter, a musician, a physician and a poet. He has himself written romance, and is about to commence the publication of a periodical at St. Petersburg. The jewels of the Countess Kouchelef are said to be valued at over two millions.

The Count has recently been to Paris, and his daily expenses at the hotel were sufficient to support an ordinary family a year. On the 15th of last month he left on the Northern Railway, and took an entire car for his train. He invited Alexander Dumas' father, to accompany him, and the novelist accepted the invitation. He will assist at the marriage of Hume, after which he will visit various parts of Russia.

ARTESIAN WELL IN KENTUCKY.—The Louisville Journal says, the stream of water now thrown out in a jet is a most beautiful feature of this well, and is worth going a long distance to see. It was bored through solid limestone, alternating at various depths with seams of sandy and argillaceous limestones. The well is now 2,086 feet deep, and throws 225 gallons of water per minute, or 324,000 gallons in twenty-four hours. The force with which the water passes through an inch nozzle throws it 66 feet above the surface of the ground.

Domestic News.

THE LIGHTNING ROD QUESTION.—The discussion as to lightning rods is getting quite animated. So far as we have observed, the tendency is to distrust the protectors altogether, and to consider them a source of danger instead of safety. The savans are divided on the question, but the anti-lightning rod party is getting all the converts at present. They urge, with much show of reason, that the conductors are capable of conveying but a small portion of lightning, and that they are likely to attract to themselves more than they can carry off, and thus endanger the buildings on which they are placed.

Some impressive facts are quoted in support of this theory. At Sanbornton, N. H., where lightning rods are scarcely known, no person was ever injured by lightning. In a large village on the shores of Winnipiseogee lake, but one building was struck, and that was one on which a lightning rod had just been placed. Within twenty years, in the village of South Andover, where not more than every fourth house has one of these appendages, five have been struck with them, and only one without. The house of Dr. Farrington, at Salem, had stood over seventy years safe without a rod, and after a rod was placed on it, this spring, the house was struck for the first time, and considerably damaged, and the owner badly injured. In the city of Lynn there are about thirty-six hundred dwelling houses, stores and barns. Of these, about one-twentieth part are furnished with conductors. The number of buildings having rods, which have been struck, has been about three to one in comparison with those having none. This makes the chances that a building having a rod will be struck, rather than one having none, about sixty to one. These facts, and many more like them, which have been noticed the present season, make out a strong case against the rods—certainly a pretty conclusive one against such mere wires as are now generally put upon buildings, which are hardly sufficient to conduct the charge of a respectable electrical machine. There is this to be said in their defense, perhaps, that, for the same reason, they cannot be very attractive of the electricity of the clouds.

GREAT GOLD NUGGET.—The London Weekly Times says:—"In our last number we stated that this extraordinary 'lump of gold' had been examined by her Majesty at Buckingham Palace. On the first of May it was exhibited at the Crystal Palace at Sydenham. There the object which excited the most general and sustained interest, was the 'Blanche Barkly nugget,' that monstrous piece of virgin ore, about the size and value of which so many tales have reached this country. Whoever wants to realize a digger's wildest dreams must inspect this nugget—larger than ever yet miners hoped to find, or geologists believed to exist. It is a solid mass of virgin gold, two feet four inches long, ten inches broad, and from one to two inches thick, weighing no less than 1743 ounces. Here and there are small holes about the size of a pea, in which some earth yet remains, and the total quantity is estimated at only six ounces; the rest is a solid mass of metal, as bright as if made at a jeweler's shop, and as soft and malleable as lead.

It is said that in comparison with this noble specimen, the actual value of which is £8000, all other nuggets that have been discovered sink into complete insignificance."

Editorial Notice.

In compliance with a request of several of our brethren, we purpose to issue a tract next week, entitled, "WHAT IS MAN?" or a Bible view of his creation, his soul and spirit, his death and connection with hell.

It will consist of about 32 pp. Price, single copy, 5 cts.; per hundred, $3.00. Postage 1 ct.

NOTICES.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at Pawlings, N. Y., commencing Nov. 10th, and continuing over the following Sunday. We expect those preaching brethren to come that feel directed by the Lord, and can trust the Lord for their pay, as most of the brethren here are poor. We invite all the brethren and sisters that can, and others that feel interested, to come to this meeting. Come saints and sinners. Those that come will be provided for while here.

Stephen, in behalf of the church of God in Pawlings.

Notice.

There will be a conference in Holden, Me., in the school house near Bro. Isaac Clewley's, commencing Nov. 12th, and continuing over the Lord's day. Bro. L. Boutell will attend the meeting, and we expect I. Damman will be here also. We desire as many of the servants of God to come as God will. Brethren and sisters come, rally, once more from the north, south, east and west, and let us raise up the standard of truth in the name of the Lord. For the Brethren,

ISAAC CLEWLEY.

Notice.

If the Lord permit, a conference will be held in West Poland, Maine, commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 11th, at 7 o'clock, and continuing over the Sabbath. Our ministering brethren in Maine are especially invited to attend. We wish all our brethren and sisters to come filled with the Spirit, and labor to see the work of God prosper, and the church built up in the most holy faith.

For the Brethren, JESSE GAY.

Notice.

Whereas, Bro. Champlain has resigned the pastorship of the River Point Advent Church, R. I., we have chosen Bro. E. Bellows as pastor. Bro. Bellows will preach one Sunday in a month—the first. The other three Sundays are left open to the preaching brethren whom we may invite. We hope those we have invited will come soon and see us.

For the Brethren. JOHN P. BABCOCK.

Book Notice.

I would say to the Brn., that I have just got printed, in Boston, an improved edition of DEATH NOT LIFE, in paper covers, and bound,—also GLAD TIDINGS and my two tracts on the word HELL, and Foster's noted letter. They can be had of Bro. Grant at the prices now noticed in the Crisis, and by writing me at Buffalo. Brethren in the ministry can have them to sell on commission, and I hope they will send soon and get a supply for the winter. I expect to remain in the East till Jan., and will visit brethren by their sending a request to the Crisis. JACOB BLAIN.

Boston, Oct. 2, 1858.

Appointments for Danielsonville, Ct.

Bro. S. S. Brewer, Oct. 24th, 31st, and Nov. 7th.

Notice.

Adjourned Meeting at Worcester of the 19th Annual Conference of Adventists.

In pursuance of a vote of the Conference, at its late meeting in Boston, May 25th, 26th, and 27th, and in compliance with an invitation of the church in Worcester, the Conference will meet, according to its adjournment, on the first Tuesday in November, at Worcester, Mass., at 10 A. M.

Per order of the President,

F. GUNNER, } Secretaries.
A. PEARCE, }

NOTICE.—The brethren and sisters in Carmel, Me., have established a regular conference at Robinson school-house, near Bro. Geo. L. Robinson's, the third Saturday in each month, and will, if they can, have preaching. Give them a call.

In behalf of the church.

N. F. NASON.

☞ NOTICE.—We would earnestly request those who are indebted to this office for Hymn Books, to remit us the amount due, as we, in all cases, have to pay cash for the same, and cannot afford to be out of the money. Probably some of our brethren have overlooked the fact that they are so long indebted for books. We would, therefore, in all love and earnestness, call their attention to the matter, as the funds of the paper are too contracted to afford lengthened credit.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Providence permitting, I will preach at the Town Hall, in Rutland, Vt., Oct. 31st.

GEO. STORRS, NEW YORK.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid. Any of the following works will be sent, any distance under 3000 miles, postage free, on receipt of the retail price:

BIBLE vs. TRADITION: In which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested; the Corruptions of Theologians Detected, and the Traditions of men Exposed: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. An invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Price, bound, 75 cents; a cheap edition, in paper covers, 35 cents.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by the Editor of the Bible Examiner; prefaced with a Biographical Sketch of the Author. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons, and fully revised. Price in plain binding 50 cents; in gilt 75 cents. A cheap edition, in paper covers, 30.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT, by Rev. H. H. Dobney, Baptist Minister, England. "Part second." 200 pages. This work is very valuable; showing that literal death is the punishment of the wicked. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents.

THE DISCUSSION between Prof. MATTISON, of the Methodist E. Church, and the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner. Question:—"Does the Bible teach that the creature Man—which the Lord God formed of the dust of the ground—has a superadded entity called the soul?" Price 25 cents in paper covers; 38 cents bound.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by the Editor of the Bible Examiner. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; bound 38 cents.

"THE WATCH TOWER: or, MAN IN DEATH; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, mis-named "spiritualism," but which is really animalism. Price 20 cents.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—By Prof. WILSON, England. His general theory is, that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents in paper covers; 75 cents bound.

"MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, The Animal Man and the Spiritual Man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS." TEXT.—"That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit:"—John 3: 6. This is a Sermon never before issued: it is put up in covers, and sold at six cents single: 50 cents per dozen: 25 copies for $1: per 100 $3,25; sent at the expense of the purchaser.

☞ We have no other works for sale than those mentioned in the foregoing list. One-third discount will be made, for cash, to such as purchase $2 worth; but, in that case, the works are sent at the expense of the purchaser. By the hundred, a still further discount will be made. Orders may be left with GEO. YOUNG, 138 William Street, New York. All letters, sent by mail, must be addressed—

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4658, New York.

LAW requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on TRACTS is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

EARTH.

The earth is one wide grave for all her sons,
And life is one long year of weary cares!
The stream of time o'er rock and quicksand runs,
The wrecks of many hearts are floating there.

The earth is one wide wilderness of woe,
Decay and death triumph on every side;
Still we cling to it, mourning though we go,
And always wishing longer to abide.

Oh! vale of sorrows, place of many tears,
Of breaking hearts, affliction, want and woe,
We struggle on a few brief bitter years,
And then are borne where all of earth must go.

Father of mercy, thou who rulest on high,
Oh, pity all our sorrow and our pain!
Hasten thy day, now dawning in the sky,
Redeem the earth unto thyself again!

Then be thy Paradise where now is weeping;
Then be sweet songs where now are only tears;
And then thy hand each heart-harp gently sweeping,
Shall wake their music for eternal years.

For the Crisis.

An Apostrophe to the Son of God.

O thou holy One, thou Life and Light of the world, how lovely art thou in all thy manifestations! Angels love and worship thee, saints burn with holy desire toward thee, and heaven, earth and hell respect thee. The very devils themselves cry to thee—"We know thee who thou art, the holy One of God." Thou wast glorious with thy Father before the world was. Thou wast "with God," and thou wast God. Thou art the Alpha and Omega. Thou art the Ancient of days. Thou didst walk in the awfulness of eternity. Thou didst sit in majesty when the angels were not, and before the seraphs did glow and burn. Creation, vast creation, is thy work. All things were made by thee, and without thee was not anything made that was made. Thou didst speak, and it was done; thou didst command and it stood fast. The immense mountain heaps were laid up by thee, and thou didst marshal every star. Thou didst line the boundaries of the wide, deep sea, and direct the channels of the lengthened, rolling rivers. Thou didst come down and walk in the cool of Eden's morning, and seal thy works "very good." Thou wast with thy people of old when they walked through the wilderness, in a solitary way, and found no city to dwell in. They tempted thee in the wilderness and provoked thee in the desert. Thou wast the "Captain of the Lord's host" when the people entered the land of promise.

In the fullness of times, thou camest down and tabernacled in flesh, and the hosts of light sung their joyous natal song. Thou didst lead the way for the faithful ones into the waters of baptism, and the embodied Spirit of Divinity sealed thy righteous act. Thou wast a Galilean stranger on the earth, and despised among the people as the son of Joseph and Mary. They knew not whence thou wast. They understood not the God that dwelt in thee. The people treated thee with contempt and spitting, and the multitude cast upon thee reproach and shame. They reckoned thee among the transgressors, and condemned thee with the vile and unjust. They laid upon thee the instrument of thine own torture, and led thee away, bound in cruelty, to the place of skulls. They hung thee on the cross with malefactors, and, gathering round thee, mocked thy dying groans. Thou didst, with thy dying breath, forgive the enemies of thy soul, and didst pour out strong crying to thy Father for them. Thou didst go down into Hades, into the confines of the darkness of the place of the dead, and the powers of hell yielded to thy Divinity. The messengers of God came down to welcome thee from the sleep of death, and the pains of the destroyer could not retain thee. Thou didst ascend on high leading "captivity captive," and didst sit then down on the throne of the Almighty [illegible]. Thou sittest in the "holy place" to forgive the sin of thy people, and to have mercy on those who seek thy grace. In glory, light and beauty, attended with unnumbered millions of angels, thou shalt come again to save the flock of thy love, and gather together thy chosen ones. [illegible] holy, adorable, lovely, everlasting One, my soul longeth unto thee. Thou art [illegible] my joy, and the spring of all my [illegible] King! Thou [illegible]

Our Interest in your Feast,

AND THE CAUSE OF THE PRESSURE OF TIMES.

For the Crisis.

The report, in part, of the camp meeting in Wilbraham, has come to hand, and been read with deep interest. How glad we should have been to have met with you on that consecrated spot, and spent a week in God's worship with those we have so frequently met in past days, and whom we so highly esteem. It would have been very cheering, even to have seen so many of the waiting ones together, but when we add our friends, our tested friends, those whose prayers have followed us, and who have so deeply sympathized with us in affliction, and aided us in time of need,—to have met them in such a feast is almost too much to expect in this life. We, however, anticipated the greeting, and tried to arrange so as to be with you, but the pressure of times, connected with the failure of crops, prevented: yet we did not forget you. We fancied we could hear the mingled prayers arise, those pleasant mornings, and the hills and dales echo, while Zion's songs were rolling through the vaulted heaven on the gentle breeze. Yea, we anticipated all the changes on such an occasion, not being altogether a stranger to such gatherings,—the joy and peace, the union and love, the tears and cares, the labor and toil, the anticipation, the realization, the smiling countenance in greeting, and the sad hearts in parting. Be assured, we did not forget you at the throne of grace.

We remarked, we intended, providence permitting, to have been with you. Yes this was my mind long before the Camp Meeting was appointed, but circumstances ordered it otherwise; hence we submitted, and with patience wait for opening providence.

I referred to the pressure of times. Perhaps some would like to have the particulars; hence I will say further: times were hard, business dull, before the spring crops were put into the ground. Their failure has made times much worse. I will give you some facts. The spring wheat, oats, barley and rye, have been a total failure in this entire region. I have not heard of one sheaf of spring grain being cut in Hancock, Adams and Brown counties. Potatoes very few, not one tenth of a crop. Corn not an entire failure, if the frost keeps off late; but the season being so very wet, but little was planted, and not one fifth of that planted will make corn. The only crop raised is winter wheat, considered to be about two thirds of the usual crop only.

From the above facts, you can form some idea of the pressure of times, when we take into consideration: we are in a new country. Its inhabitants are improving their farms, by breaking and fencing, which is very expensive; also building comfortable houses and barns, which are attended with nearly doubly the expense here that it would be in the East, on account of the high price of lumber and other building materials. Making these improvements, they have become embarrassed, and have depended on their crops to relieve them and help them out. One more item I ought to have mentioned, which makes the picture darker still. Last year, winter wheat was entirely destroyed. Thus for two years the crops have failed, and all can form some idea of the pressure of times in consequence. However, there is grain enough in the country to supply home consumption, i. e. the inhabitants, but none to fatten pork or beef. Thus goes the things of earth. I close this sketch.

W. PRATT.

ETERNITY.—Eternity has no gray hairs. The flowers fade, the heart withers, man grows old and dies; the world lies down in the sepulchre of ages, but time writes no wrinkle on the brow of eternity. Eternity! Stupendous thought! The ever-present, unborn, undecaying and undying—the endless chain, composing the life of God—the golden thread, entwining the destinies of the universe. Earth has its beauties, but time shrouds them for the grave; its honors, they are but the sunshine of an hour; its palaces, they are but the gilded sepulchre; its possessions, they are toys of changing fortune; its pleasures, they are but as bursting bubbles. Not so in the untried bourne. In the dwelling of the Almighty can come no footsteps of decay—its days will know no darkening—eternal splendor forbids the approach of night. Its glory will never wane, for there is the ever-present God. Its harmonies will never cease, exhaustless love supplies the song.

THE PROMISES.

When o'er my heart some dark'ning shadow clingeth,
Till hope's obscured, and death seems brooding there;
Some promise sweet, its native radiance bringeth—
Sunshine and beauty—like its author fair.

When o'er my mental powers a stupor bindeth,
Like Bunyan's Giant at his castle gate;
Cords round my heart with deep despair it windeth
Till I can bear no more its sinking weight.

Then like some distant music softly stealing,
This promise has my weary bosom charmed;
Still loud, and louder rung, like thunders pealing,—
"Trust me! I'm stronger than the strong man arm'd."

And shall I fear the roar of death's cold river?
Will not some blessed promise soothe me there?
And when I sleep, will God forget me? never—
Till I am call'd to meet him in the air!

VESTA N. CUDWORTH.

For the Crisis.

"The dream is certain; and the interpretation thereof sure." DAN. 2: 45.

The dream is established, or settled immovably; and the explanation of it firm—like a rock that resists the action of all the elements that may war against it. "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." Matt. 5: 18. God, "also, is wise and will bring evil; and will not call back his words." Isa. 31: 2. These Scriptures reprove the presumptuous who pervert God's plain word; and also the flippant interpreter, who makes his feelings, his fancy or his presumed faith, the measure and value of its meaning. Those who will not take some pains to learn the import of the language and symbols of prophecy, ere they assume to interpret, may be found among the "presumptuous." Deut. 18: 19–21; Eccl. 5: 1–3. All may believe the word; and all who have a heart may preach the word. This is authorized. But no one is authorized to put torth creeds, inherent impressions as the interpretation of any part of prophetic truth. Such seem not to realize that they treat the Most High as if he were their fellow! It is a form of profanity that is no less injurious because it is so prevalent.

A few "feel" that the United States constitute the Fifth Kingdom of Dan. 2 and 7. Dr. Wadsworth, Dr. Berg, Dr. Baldwin, &c., are specimens of this. Others "think" that the King of the North is England, (or Russia, or something aside from Scripture,) and the King of the South Spain—France being the geographical and prophetic centre. Whereas, Jerusalem and Palestine is the centre; and Syria the north and Egypt the south of prophecy. Through nearly four thousand years we find the north located like Mount Zion, with no geographical change. Zeph. 2: Jer. 1: 14, 15, and about twenty other times; also Dan. 11.

"He that hath a dream let him tell a dream. But he that hath my word let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." Jer. 23: 28. The symbols are not contemporaneous, but successive—giving a series of organized, oppressive nationalities, and occupying well known geographical localities. As India was a place geographically, so was Babylon; so was Medo-Persia; so was Greece, and so was Rome. Then in Revelation we have Rome or Romanism symbolized by a series of symbols that succeed each other as the events unfold, or to the judgment.

They do not migrate to other geographical positions. Nor do they evaporate into dreamy theories, having no geography or political body at all. No, no. The imagery and history and geography are Roman, (or, in a few points, Jewish.)

The Holy Ghost said to John that the woman is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth. Rev. 17: 18. This was Rome then; and even now Romanism, politically and ecclesiastically, is the prevailing system there symbolized in the prophetic earth. "The seven heads are seven mountains;" and they (the heads) are "seven kings"—forms of supreme government, that direct the body of that beast which bears the woman.

But I forbear. Do let us, beloved brethren, bear in mind these essential parts of Scripture. Is it not better to refrain than to utter any thing hasty before God? "The truth" is in the "Word;" and we must needs get the Word ere we attempt to tell "the truth."

Good Instruction.

The following excellent remarks are from "Man's Nature and Destiny," by George Storrs.

THOUGHTS FOR CONSIDERATION.

Those who embrace the doctrine of Life and immortality only through Jesus Christ, feel that they hold the most glorious of all truths ever made known to men. This feeling, we believe, is just and right. But what influence should it have on our hearts and lives? The most glorious truths, embraced and believed, ought to produce results proportionate to their value; else we "hold the truth in unrighteousness," and have reason to fear a greater condemnation. Men, holding such invaluable truths, ought personally to be constant imitators of Christ in all his tempers of mind, and devotion to the welfare of men.

To one point, especially, we wish to call attention, viz: Our feelings and conduct towards those who differ from us in opinion. Too often, it may be, a disposition is felt like that of the imperfect disciples, when they were ready to call fire down from heaven to consume those who would not receive their Master. There was an honest zeal for the truth in that feeling, but it was not chastened by that pure love which filled the heart of their Master. It seemed to them, the truth was so manifest, that Jesus was the true Messiah, that not to receive him at once, was evidence of a wilful obstinacy in the matter, that rendered them deserving of instant death. They did not understand their own spirit, or temper of mind, much less did they comprehend the long-suffering love that reigned in their beloved Master's heart. We cannot tell what light, or evidence, has been bestowed on another's mind, and therefore we are not competent to judge, whether the rejection of truth is willful, or, at present, unavoidable from circumstances over which that person has had no control. At any rate, his rejection or non-reception of what we regard as important and glorious truth, is no reason why we should not be patient towards him. Let us remember the long-suffering patience of God towards us, while we were in unbelief, and perhaps sinned against greater light, than he whom we may now be disposed to condemn for remaining just where we were. Impatience, or harsh treatment of them, will not be likely to lead them to the truth, but to drive them farther from it, and possibly harden them in unbelief.

While, therefore, we may not yield up, or abandon, any truth we have received, of life in Christ alone, let us strive by kindness, and a clear presentation of the truth, to lead men rather than seem to drive them into the truth. If we contemplate our own past experience, we shall see the fitness of this course. In conversation with those who differ from us, or do not yet see as we do, if irritation is manifested by them, let it not produce the same in us: better to drop the subject, for that time, than attempt to continue, if a Christ-like spirit cannot be maintained.

Moreover, it is not enough that we gain men to our opinions, or faith: if they are not gained to Christ, even to a vital union with him—"made partakers of the divine nature"—they "have no life in them," and will perish, notwithstanding their knowledge in theory. Let us labor, in love, to induce them to such a consideration of these glorious truths, as shall effectually draw them into an experience of this life-giving union with the Son of God.

We fear, both with respect to ourself and others, that under the strong opposition we sometimes have had to encounter, in contending for truth, we may not have sufficiently considered that our object is not gained merely by silencing our opponents, or by converting them to our views of truth. They and we ought to be better Christians—more like Christ—by the acquisition of such glorious knowledge of God and his Christ, and of the love of God so wonderfully manifested towards the perishing children of Adam. If, instead of this, we become more worldly, more uncharitable, more impatient, more proud, and less meek and lowly like our Master, what have we gained? and what must others think of the truths which we profess to have embraced? If ever men, since the apostles' days, were called to be devoted christians, and to make sacrifices to promote truth—even the knowledge of God and his glorious scheme of mercy in Christ—we should count ourselves the men. Shall God's light, with which he has blessed us, be by us "put under a bushel?" or shall we let it shine, to enlighten and bless others?

Let us labor, by word and deed, with all meekness and patience, with long-suffering, to spread the truth abroad; and so order our lives as not to hinder that truth from its appropriate work of making men more like Christ—more heavenly-minded, more obedient to our heavenly Father's will in all things, "waiting for his Son from heaven, whom he has raised from the dead; even Jesus, who delivered us from the wrath to come." 1 Thess. 1: 10.

CHARITY.—Proportion thy charity to the strength of thine estate, lest God in anger proportion thine estate to the weakness of thy charity. And when thou givest, let the lips of the poor be the trumpet of thy gift, lest in seeking applause thou lose thy reward. Nothing is more pleasing to God than an open hand and a close mouth.

☞ We should walk through life as through the Swiss mountains, where a hasty word may bring down an avalanche.

The Danger of Halting.

What is it you are wavering between? Dust and ashes, and "a crown of glory that fadeth not away?" On your right hand is Christ, heaven, and an immortality of blessedness; on your left hand is disobedience, rebellion, discontent, remorse despair. Between these you are halting! While you halt the "gulf" is forming that will soon be "fixed;" the character is deepening that will soon be stereotyped forever. Indecision becomes decision; you decide for hell while you waver about heaven. And how imminent the peril of those that are wavering! It is now, or it is never; it is here, or it is nowhere. The door will soon be shut that can never be opened, and the dark abyss set that can never be crossed. O! that I could bring home to every halting man the position that, as a sinner, without Christ, he occupies!

Some will remember a touching tale mentioned in one of the little periodicals published for the laboring classes. It was published some years ago. It narrates how a poor man, on one of the rocky coasts of our country, that got his bread by gathering sea-fowls' eggs, went out one morning on his perilous adventure, and looking down a terrific steep, he saw midway a ledge abutting from the rock, covered with a cluster of the sea-fowls' nests. He fastened his rope to a tree above the cliff, and lowered himself down till he trod upon the ledge. In his eagerness to grasp the spoil, he unwittingly dropped the noose of the rope by which he had descended, and it swung, as it appeared, far beyond his reach; and there he stood on that narrow ledge, above him a fearful height he had no hope to scale, below him a terrific precipice with the sea dashing at its base. It was a moment of unutterable anguish. In intensity of dismay, by a desperate effort, he sprang upward. It pleased God he should grasp the rope. He drew himself up to the summit, trembling with transport and terror. Every one of us can realize the peril of that fellow-creature. But how akin to this, but intensely more awful, the condition of every waverer! He stands on the narrow ledge of life; above him is the terrific mountain of his guilt that he has no power in himself to scale; below him is the fearful abyss of death. There is but the breath in his nostrils between him and the bottomless pit. O, awake, fellow-sinner; awake to thy true and perilous position! It is late, but not too late. There is yet the hope that hangs from the cross of Jesus, or rather from the throne of God; that hope can lift thee over the mount of thy guilt, and land thee on the brink of the shore of eternal safety and peace. O leap and live! "Fly for refuge, and lay hold of the hope set before you," and as God liveth, your soul shall live! He is "slow to anger and plenteous in mercy." "As I live," saith the Lord God, "I have no pleasure in the death of a sinner, but rather that he should repent and live. Turn ye, turn ye; for why will ye die?"—Rev. Hugh Stowell.

McCheyne's Hints to Ministers.

Expect much, and much will be given. Souls are perishing every day; and our own entrance into eternity cannot be far distant. Let us, like, Mary, do what we can, and no doubt God will bless it, and reward us openly.

Seek to be lamb-like; without this all your efforts to do good to others will be as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

Get much of the hidden life in your own soul; soon it will make life spread around.

Never forget that the end of a sermon is the salvation of the people.

"Cleave to the Lord;" not to man, but to the Lord.

Do not fear the face of man. Remember how small their anger will appear in eternity.

Oh, fight hard against sin and the devil. The devil never sleeps; be ye also active for good.

But an inch of time remains, and the eternal ages roll on forever—but an inch on which we stand and preach the way of salvation to the perishing world.

It is not great talents God blesses, so much as great likeness to Jesus. A holy minister is an awful weapon in the hand of God.

Judging Evil of Others.

Suppose it should be given to some malign angel to put upon every man some outward visible mark of the thoughts that you have had of him during the passage of a single day; and that at evening these men should come up before you, one by one, each having a blotch upon him significant of the judgment which you had passed! What would you think at such a sight as you would then see? Why, it would be as if a hospital had opened its doors, and let out a troop of its miserable, spotted, scarred, deformed, leprous inmates! You would say, "Who are these wretched, diseased creatures? Ah, who are they?" "They are the men who come before you, bringing only the spots and stains that you have given them!" Ah! let every man heed the Apostle's injunction, and let every man be not only slow to hear and to speak, but slow even to think evil of his fellow-men!—Beecher.

WAGES OF SIN.—The wages that sin promises the sinner are life, pleasure and profit; but the wages that it pays are death, torment, and destruction. He that would know the falsehood and deceit of sin, must compare its promises with its payment.

Health Department.

Rattlesnake Bites.

The following is recommended for rattlesnake bites, by Dr. Dignowity, after twenty-five years' experience.

Immediately, or as soon as possible, a large dose of olive oil should be given, from one to several gills, according to the age of the sufferer. I believe with Mr. Davis, there is nothing known in chemistry equal to it, to neutralize all poisons, mineral, vegetable, or animal. A bandage, also, saturated with sweet oil, may be tied as soon as possible above the wound, and then apply one of the most handy methods of suction to the wound. There is no danger to any one sucking the wound with the mouth; but not every person possesses the necessary courage. Therefore other methods may be used. A common tumbler half filled with alcohol or gin, quickly turned over the wound, so as to make a vacuum, will make the venom rise in bubbles to the surface. Bathing the swollen parts with aqua ammonia, or the tincture of No. 6 will have the desired effect. But the principal remedy, after the oil, would be large doses of the tincture of No. 6 internally, and often—every fifteen or twenty minutes—for the first twenty-four hours. This much neglected medicine is nevertheless one of the best and strongest diffusible antiseptics, and calculated eminently to produce a due balance of the circulation and check inflammation and mortifications; and its due application by the medical profession, and the public would have saved thousands of amputations. As soon as the swelling abates and warmth to the extremities is restored, the poison is localized, and the greatest danger passed. Still the oil should be repeated, in six and twelve hours subsequently, in more moderate quantities; also the antiseptic tincture for several days, at longer intervals, as the symptoms may indicate. A large cloth saturated in sanative water—made of rain water, fine salt, spirits of camphor, and aqua ammonia—will be found excellent to apply over the swelled parts. Externally, there are various methods and preparations used. Many, no doubt, are excellent. For a poultice to the wound, a compound of fine carbon and yeast I believe is the best and strongest local antiseptic; and I have always applied the same with success. Also the sediment of the tincture of No. 6. That which is prepared in best French brandy is always preferred by me.

The above is the principal treatment that has been successfully followed by me, and by others by my directions, with a large number of reptile bites. I will also annex a very simple method, followed by Mexicans and Indians.—But though I have myself seen several persons who were cured by this method, I cannot testify personally to its efficacy:

The head of a live rattlesnake is struck off with some sharp instrument, without previously exciting the reptile, and its gall is extracted and preserved. When any one is bitten, the gall or part of it is dissolved in tepid water, and given internally. A bandage, oiled or greased, is also applied above, and the wounded part is immersed into curdled milk. In a short time the swelling passes off and the venom is localized, the milk turns yellow, and the danger is passed. This seems a very simple method, and is worth the trial. I have always had on hand my own resources, and therefore have not been necessitated to resort to it.

For the present, I remain fraternally yours,

THE ATHEIST.

"The fool hath said in his heart there is no God."

Ah, foolish man, thus to reject
Thy only hope of life:
To deem that death shall end with thee
The last and fearful strife.

Ah no! there is a God in heaven,
Thy inmost heart he knows;
Then seek not to exalt thyself
While you his word oppose.

That God will surely call thee forth,
Where'er thou makest thy bed;
Thy sleeping dust it shall respond
To the archangel's tread.

When thus arrayed before thy Judge,
Anguish will seize thy heart,
To hear from his most gracious lips,
That dreadful sound—depart!

O man, be wise, confess that God,
Who gave his life for thee;
That in his glorious presence you
May live eternally.

Good Deeds.

God judgeth men according to the motives which actuate them, and not as their acts appear to their fellows. There are many who have left behind them tens of thousands of dollars, to found a college or erect a costly church, who had as much an eye to their posthumous aggrandizement and perpetuation of name, as if they had spent their wealth in raising a lofty column on their tomb: for so devoid of charity have they been known to be, that, while they lavished their millions upon some colossal hobby, they would not deign a penny to the starving orphan that begged from door to door.

In vain the conscience-stricken miser at his last gasp, with palsied hand conveys his hoarded, ill-gotten wealth to monks or monasteries, as a counterpoise to the damning load of sin which clings around his neck. The tribute is rejected—the coin is counterfeit; for the heavenly impress "Love" is not upon it.

Whatever advantages we may possess, they are but given to us as trusts, for which we are accountable; and it will go hard with us indeed if we do not use them so that we can give a good account of them when we are called to render up our stewardship. Some have talents for one thing, some for another; and some enjoy the riches of this world. The last mentioned is not the least powerful touchstone to try the quality of a man's religion. The religion that does not touch the pockets is only so in name, no matter how loud-sounding; and the religion which costs its possessor nothing, is just no religion at all. For, the man that seeth his neighbor in need, and shuts up his bowels of compassion, how can the love of God abide in him? How, indeed! And yet there are not a few who loudly proclaim their love for the cause of Christ, who never help it with a dollar, though able to afford it for their enjoyments; or when they do, it is all in copper, that every one may hear the rattle as it thunders into the contribution box.

My heart aches when I see some of our poor preachers, who have made no pretension of following Christ for the loaves and fishes, with threadbare and darned coats, and worn-out shoes, yet keeping up a brave heart and cheerful countenance against trouble and anxieties for beloved ones at home, poorly provided for, nay almost, if not entirely, destitute. For truth's sake they have turned their backs upon rich friends and sumptuous fare; and, derided and scorned by the world and its votaries, they keep their buffeted and weather-beaten faces heavenward still. This they expected; but it is hard to look in vain for sympathy from those professing a like faith with themselves. I have often heard it said, "Why don't the preacher work for a living? and why not?" Never has galley-slave toiled more unceasingly, or with more exhausting labor, than do the Advent ministers to-day, who do their duty. No candid man can say it is for ease or riches that they enter the Advent ministry. No, no; it is all up-hill work; toil, toil, but upward still, leaving the earth as they approach the heavens. See him, as he wanders about from city to city, and from village to village, weary, wet, sad, and almost disheartened. He preaches, and those who hear him are more disposed to criticise his sermon than to assist him on his way. He opens his little bundle of books and tracts. Look at that self-dubbed saint, how he haggles about the price of a three-cent tract, a nine-penny pamphlet, or that quarter-dollar book! Yes, he wonders why religious works are so much dearer than others, (he buys books by the size,) and guesses that he wont buy just now; moreover, books but seem to distract his thoughts from the Bible! Worthy man! Nevertheless, offer him one for nothing, and he will instantly enlarge upon the good which accrues from the distribution of such precious tracts. Another "smoking" brother, tilting himself back in his chair, while the fragrant (?) vapor envelops his head, says, "He (the preacher) is not worse off than was his blessed Master, who had not where to lay his head." True, most sanctimonious smoker, nor if he were mocked, betrayed, spit upon, buffetted, crowned with thorns, CRUCIFIED! would he have suffered more than that Incarnate Excellence,

Whose dying groans made earth's foundation shake!

Yet in him the Savior hungers, thirsts, is naked, languishes, and "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it not unto me."

One would almost think, to hear some of the hard-fisted, uncharitable professors talk, that they longed for the "good old times" of persecution, when God's ministers were hunted like wild beasts in the dens and caves of the mountains, from whence they were dragged to feed the flames, or writhe upon the gibbet. But, thank God, there are those among us who will not let their needy brother want, but share with him their mite, their crust and cup of water.

When that day shall come for which all other days were made, when the Mediator shall become the Judge, when the mighty balance is struck, who shall stand justified in the sight of God, of angels, and of men? Who shall hear with joy unutterable the life-giving approval of the King of Glory, as his voice peals forth the eternal welcome, "Come ye blessed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was an hungered and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me."

So great is the happiness which fills the bosoms of the ransomed of God, that all their sorrows and trials are forgotten, and they wonder at the gracious remembrance of the Lord, as he recalls those actions which had been accounted unto them for righteousness, and which had disappeared from their glory-bedazzled eyes. Humbly they depreciate their feeble works as all too undeserving of the high encomiums of their Judge, and say, "Lord, when saw we thee an hungered and fed thee? or thirsty and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger and took thee in? or naked and clothed thee? or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." These words bring back a time when unseen by man they had knelt by the stranger's bed, and held the cup of water to the parched lips of the friendless dying. Or when the freezing limbs of houseless indigence were warmed and clothed by unostentatious charity. And he had seen it all! That sleepless eye which saw the widow's mite, had noted the secret acts of love, and in the pages of eternal life wrote down the doer's name.

Angels.

A DISCOURSE, BY WM. SHEPHERD.

(Concluded.)

The relations the angels sustain toward the Church, as taught by our Savior, is taught also by David:—"The angel of the Lord encampeth around about them that fear him, and delivereth them." Ps. 34: 7. The expression "encampeth round about" is one of peculiar significance, and denotes that they serve as a body guard to God's children, which is confirmed by the Psalmist in another place, thus:—"He shall give his angels charge over thee," &c. It appears that David depended very much in the matter of success on the interposition of those shining ones, when in conflict with the enemy; for he says in his prayer to God for assistance, referring to his persecutors,—"Let the angel of the Lord chase them." Ps. 35; 5, 6. Now we may with propriety, under like circumstances with this patriarch, use similar language.

It is very evident that most of the triumphant successes of the people of God, can only be accounted for through angelic interference, originated and directed by Jehovah. This has been proved in the foregoing, hence needs no further references from Scripture. To one, however, we might advert in this connection, showing that in accordance with the divine behests they do inflict the highest punishment. Thus, in the case of the haughty Herod, who, "arrayed in gorgeous attire, sat upon his throne," and delivered an oration, displaying his worldly wisdom with much pomp and eloquence, the people were carried away as by some "strange infatuation," as they are now-a-days with the harangues of some of the "great ones of earth." They "gave a shout saying, it is the voice of a god, and not of a man. And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms and gave up the ghost." Acts 12: 21–23. A terrible warning to those that are wise in their own estimation, substantiating the truth that—"He taketh the wise in their own craftiness." We should notice the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, where angels are represented as carrying the beggar into the bosom of Abraham; but as it is simply a parable portraying two classes, viz: the Jews and Gentiles,—angels symbolizing the instrumentalities through which the blessings of the gospel are communicated to the latter,—we pass at once to remark on a passage in Hebrews 2: 5;—"For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world (aion) to come whereof we speak." This Scripture is an important one, and should claim more than ordinary attention. It has a very favorable bearing toward one of the leading ideas advanced in this essay; and teaches to our mind (not only by inference but by good and substantial testimony) that the present dispensation is almost entirely under the control and supervision (in a secondary sense) of the angelic powers; that the greater affairs of the church militant and the general administration and government of this age is, in subjection to or committed unto them by Jehovah through our Lord Jesus the Messiah. How apparent then is it that they occupy a very elevated and responsible position. How few appear conscious of this fact and less feel willing to admit it; but, divine testimony removes every doubt on this point and absolutely proves it—that the present economy or age is in subjection and under the control of the Elohim, or heavenly ones of God, and will continue to be thus held, until Christ shall come "the second time" invested with the majesty and energy of Omnipotence and clothed in the infinite splendor of the eternal Godhead, when the world shall be under immediate subjection to him and "the saints of the Most High;" (Dan. 7: 18, 27; Matt. 19: 28; 1 Cor. 6: 2; Rev. 5: 10,) when a new order of things will obtain quite diverse from the present, and the divine edict shall be cheerfully and fully complied with, namely, "Let all the angels of God worship him."

Now we turn to the book of the Apocalypse, and behold the wonderful and sublime revelations unfolded to St. John on "the Isle called Patmos," where he was banished "for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ." These stupendous and glorious events, or "things which must shortly come to pass," were presented unto this beloved exile through the instrumentality of an angel, as the record purports. "He (God) sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John." This book treats upon the subject of angels so very profusely—their various offices—the multiform and multiplied duties devolving upon them, and the nature of their employment, that it would extend beyond the limits of an ordinary essay to point out the number of instances, and enter into the minutia of the many passages herein which make mention of them. One, however, we will call your attention to, recorded in the 12th Chap. "And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon: and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, now is come salvation and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused him before our God day and night," &c. We shall not stop here to comment upon this remarkable passage now. Much difference of opinion exists among the learned in regard to its true import. We make but one deduction from it, which will serve our purpose at this time: that is the fact, that there are evil or bad angels existing, as well as goods ones, who are governed and directed by one general head, or commander, who is "called the Devil and Satan," and the work which they are insidiously and constantly engaged in, is one which is diametrically opposite to that of the "holy ones" of God. We learn from the inspired penman that they are fallen intelligences, who once occupied a high and honorable place in the Divine Hierarchy—"angels which kept not their first estate, (or primacy) but left their own habitation," who are "reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." Jude 6: Matt. 25: 41. Their CHIEF, or Prince, for he is called "the prince of the power of the air," and "the prince of this world," (John 12: 31; 14: 30; Eph. 2: 2,) seems at a certain time to have warmly contended with Michael the archangel, in relation to the body of Moses. Jude 9.

Their number is legion. They are shrewd, possessing the wisdom of a serpent, but not the harmlessness of a dove, diffusing themselves into those who are taken willing captives. Yea, they were found incarnate in Jesus' days upon earth, both in men, women and grown children. This was one of the functions of His mission—"to cast out devils," and to heal those who were oppressed by the devil. Matt. 4: 24; 8; 16; Mark 1: 32–34. You may find a number of instances in Scripture where this power was exercised by the Son of God and his Apostles, and the work actually accomplished. He cast no less than seven devils out of Mary Magdalene. He commanded them out of the miserable creature wandering among the tombs. He called one from the Syrophenician woman's daughter, by her earnest request. "And behold a woman of Canaan . . . cried unto him, saying, have mercy on me, O Lord, thou Son of David! my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil." Matt. 15: 22–28. Some of the "possessed" we find are very young, for they are designated children, as was the case with a man who was tormented with an exceeding vicious deaf and dumb one. See Luke 9: 38–43. How many Mary Magdalenes are there now? How many men like this wanderer from God! How many mothers who have daughters "grievously vexed with the devil!" How many young men and young women, yea, and aged ones, too, who are his willing victims, "taken captive at his will!" It may be difficult to tell, but one thing we know, the world has not grown any better since Jesus dwelt among us, and, if any thing, it has grown much worse, in a true religious point of view; and in the meantime the devil has lost none of his power; he is not chained yet, as some suppose, nor yet restrained "from going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it," "seeking whom he may devour." Job 1: 7; 1 Pet. 5: 8. These evil

Angels your march oppose,
Who still in strength excel,
Your secret, sworn, eternal foes,
Countless, invisible.
With rage that never ends,
Their hellish arts they try;
Legions of dire, malicious fiends,
And spirits throned on high.

And here is the origin of those "spirit rappings" which assume to be spirits of our departed friends, or ghosts of the dead, endeavoring to succeed in their ruinous work under the insinuating garb of an "angel of light." It may be as well here to observe, however, that they are all made subservient to the will of the Most High, and can proceed no further than what his power may grant, as in the case of Job. Sometimes he suffers them in various ways to afflict his own people by "sending evil angels among them," (Ps. 78, 49,) delivering them into his hands for their temporal punishment and spoilation, that they may be ultimately "saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." 1 Cor. 5: 5. The final destiny of these fallen angels, with Lucifer their chief, is utter destruction in "everlasting fire," together with all the wicked. Matt. 25: 41; 2 Pet. 2: 4; Jude 6; Rev. 20: 9, 10.

We will now come at once to consider the work of God's holy messengers in the closing scenes of this world. We find that they are to participate to a great extent in the work of "the last day." They are to come forth in this "harvest which is the end of the (aion) world" in the character of "reapers" as Jesus informs us;—"the harvest is the end of the world and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world, (age.) The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity. And shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine," &c. Matt. 13: 30, 39–43. We see by this that the execution of the divine judgments upon the wicked are committed unto them in part. This is clearly brought to view in the Revelations. See the proceedings of the vial-Angels. Rev. 16th chap. The wheat is gathered first, which is the righteous, as we read in another place; "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of the trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Matt. 24: 31. Again, "As it was in the days of Lot . . . even so shall it be when the Son of man is revealed." How was it in the days of Lot? God then in mercy sent his angels to convey that "righteous man" out from the impending fiery destruction. So here again he sends forth his angels into the great Sodom of the world, to gather his people who are to "be caught up to meet the Lord" at his coming, previous to its overthrow and the awful havoc which will ensue; and they will appear visibly, no doubt, as they did to the Sodomites of old. They will also attend our blessed Lord in his second advent to earth, agreeably to his own words: "The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his holy angels." "The Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him." Matt. 16: 27; 25: 31; Mark 8: 38. The Apostle says that "The Lord Jesus shall be manifested from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel . . . who shall be punished with everlasting destruction," &c. 2 Thess. 1: 7–9. Here we have them again officiating as the executioners of Jehovah's judgments upon the wicked in concert with Christ. Their number in attending our beloved [illegible] in his glorious Epiphany and [illegible] him through the [illegible] large and mighty. Daniel had a glimpse of the magnificent scene in vision, and he thus enumerates them; "thousand thousands . . . ten thousand times ten thousand." Again he says "one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven," &c. The phrase here—"clouds of heaven"—obviously denotes vast bodies of angels which will appear like so many gorgeous clouds in the firmament, and this comports with what the Revelator affirms—"Behold he cometh with clouds," &c. Dan. 7: 13; Rev. 1: 7.

Once more. As we have good ground to believe that they took no trifling part in the creation, so we think that they will bear an important part in the resurrection of those "who sleep in Jesus." The Apostle represents some as saying, "How are the dead raised up," &c. We answer. There are several passages in Scripture which strongly indicate that the dead may be raised through the agency of those superior angels, "who are great in might," that "the power of God" or the divine energy may be exerted through their instrumentality, and thus the sleeping saints resurrected and brought forth! It is true, Jesus says, "I will raise him (the believer) up at the last day." But it does not necessarily follow that he himself personally will accomplish the work. Many things are predicted of him, as also of the Father, which are consummated through various agencies of divine appointment. It is obvious that angelic interposition was displayed in the resurrection of the Lord Jesus himself; and though angels did not actually raise his lifeless form to the being of an endless life, yet we know that on the morning of his resurrection there was "a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door (of his sepulchre) and sat upon it." Matt. 28: 2. And then again Jesus declares, in "the last day" that he will send forth his angels to gather his elect." Now we certainly know that many of his "elect" sleep in the dust of the earth awaiting their recusitation. We have reason to believe that Michael the archangel resurrected the body of Moses; from the circumstance of his contending with the devil or the devil with him about "who has the power of death;" and the fact of Moses appearing on the Mount of Transfiguration. We know that they are to accompany our blessed Lord in his descent with the voice of the Archangel (now do not let us confound the Archangel with Christ) and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise." But be this as it may, in the glorious advent of the Messiah, myriads of angels, as a royal body guard and shining retinue, will attend him with a great sound of a trumpet, and the most ravishing music that ever yet has greeted human ears, or filled with heavenly melody the circumambient air. "The dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive (i. e., the sanctified in God, and called to be saints) and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17.

Thus we have hurried through this interesting theme, endeavoring to point out the nature of those celestial beings; the various relations they sustain in the Divine government; the character of their work in primal ages; the position they occupy under the Christian dispensation; the variety of duties they perform in the superhuman scheme of man's redemption; the majesty of their work in the coming and final crisis of the world; showing conclusively that they have ever stood ready, and now do, at the [illegible] of the Almighty, to cheerfully do his commands, hearkening unto the voice of his word, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] And, in the [illegible] forcibly is it [illegible] in our [illegible] [illegible] all [illegible] that (especially) to [illegible]

THE ATHEIST.

"The fool hath said in his heart there is no God."

Ah, foolish man, thus to reject
Thy only hope of life:
To deem that death shall end with thee
The last and fearful strife.

Ah no! there is a God in heaven,
Thy inmost heart he knows:
Then seek not to exalt thyself
While you his word oppose.

That God will surely call thee forth,
Where'er thou makest thy bed;
Thy sleeping dust it shall respond
To the archangel's tread.

When thus arrayed before thy Judge,
Anguish will seize thy heart,
To hear from his most gracious lips,
That dreadful sound—depart!

O man, be wise, confess that God,
Who gave his life for thee;
That in his glorious presence you
May live eternally.

Good Deeds.

God judgeth men according to the motives which actuate them, and not as their acts appear to their fellows. There are many who have left behind them tens of thousands of dollars, to found a college or erect a costly church, who had as much an eye to their posthumous aggrandizement and perpetuation of name, as if they had spent their wealth in raising a lofty column on their tomb: for so devoid of charity have they been known to be, that, while they lavished their millions upon some colossal hobby, they would not deign a penny to the starving orphan that begged from door to door.

In vain the conscience-stricken miser at his last gasp, with palsied hand conveys his hoarded, ill-gotten wealth to monks or monasteries, as a counterpoise to the damning load of sin which clings around his neck. The tribute is rejected—the coin is counterfeit; for the heavenly impress "Love" is not upon it.

Whatever advantages we may possess, they are but given to us as trusts, for which we are accountable; and it will go hard with us indeed if we do not use them so that we can give a good account of them when we are called to render up our stewardship. Some have talents for one thing, some for another; and some enjoy the riches of this world. The last mentioned is not the least powerful touchstone to try the quality of a man's religion. The religion that does not touch the pockets is only so in name, no matter how loud-sounding; and the religion which costs its possessor nothing, is just no religion at all. For, the man that seeth his neighbor in need, and shuts up his bowels of compassion, how can the love of God abide in him? How, indeed! And yet there are not a few who loudly proclaim their love for the cause of Christ, who never help it with a dollar, though able to afford it for their enjoyments; or when they do, it is all in copper, that every one may hear the rattle as it thunders into the contribution box.

My heart aches when I see some of our poor preachers, who have made no pretension of following Christ for the loaves and fishes, with threadbare and darned coats, and worn-out shoes, yet keeping up a brave heart and cheerful countenance against trouble and anxieties for beloved ones at home, poorly provided for, nay almost, if not entirely, destitute. For truth's sake they have turned their backs upon rich friends and sumptuous fare; and, derided and scorned by the world and its votaries, they keep their buffeted and weather-beaten faces heavenward still. This they expected; but it is hard to look in vain for sympathy from those professing a like faith with themselves. I have often heard it said, "Why don't the preacher work for a living? [illegible]" Never has galley-slave toiled more unceasingly, or with more exhausting labor, than do the Advent ministers to-day, who do their duty. No candid man can say it is for ease or riches that they enter the Advent ministry. No, no; it is all up-hill work; toil, toil, but upward still, leaving the earth as they approach the heavens. See him, as he wanders about from city to city, and from village to village, weary, wet, sad, and almost disheartened. He preaches, and those who hear him are more disposed to criticise his sermon than to assist him on his way. He opens his little bundle of books and tracts. Look at that self-dubbed saint, how he haggles about the price of a three-cent tract, a nine-penny pamphlet, or that quarter-dollar book! Yes, he wonders why religious works are so much dearer than others, (he buys books by the size,) and guesses that he wont buy just now; moreover, books but seem to distract his thoughts from the Bible! Worthy man! Nevertheless, offer him one for nothing, and he will instantly enlarge upon the good which accrues from the distribution of such precious tracts. Another "smoking" brother, tilting himself back in his chair, while the fragrant (?) vapor envelops his head, says, "He (the preacher) is not worse off than was his blessed Master, who had not where to lay his head." True, most sanctimonious smoker, nor if he were mocked, betrayed, spit upon, buffetted, crowned with thorns, CRUCIFIED! would he have suffered more than that Incarnate Excellence,

Whose dying groans made earth's foundation shake!

Yet in him the Savior hungers, thirsts, is naked, languishes, and "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it not unto me."

One would almost think, to hear some of the hard-fisted, uncharitable professors talk, that they longed for the "good old times" of persecution, when God's ministers were hunted like wild beasts in the dens and caves of the mountains, from whence they were dragged to feed the flames, or writhe upon the gibbet. But, thank God, there are those among us who will not let their needy brother want, but share with him their mite, their crust and cup of water.

When that day shall come for which all other days were made, when the Mediator shall become the Judge, when the mighty balance is struck, who shall stand justified in the sight of God, of angels, and of men? Who shall hear with joy unutterable the life-giving approval of the King of Glory, as his voice peals forth the eternal welcome, "Come ye blessed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was an hungered and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me."

So great is the happiness which fills the bosoms of the ransomed of God, that all their sorrows and trials are forgotten, and they wonder at the gracious remembrance of the Lord, as he recalls those actions which had been accounted unto them for righteousness, and which had disappeared from their glory-bedazzled eyes. Humbly they depreciate their feeble works as all too undeserving of the high encomiums of their Judge, and say, "Lord, when saw we thee an hungered and fed thee? or thirsty and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger and took thee in? or naked and clothed thee? or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." These words bring back a time when unseen by man they had knelt by the stranger's bed, and held the cup of water to the parched lips of the friendless dying. Or when the freezing limbs of houseless indigence were warmed and clothed by unostentatious charity. And he had seen it all! That sleepless eye which saw the widow's mite, had noted the secret acts of love, and in the pages of eternal life wrote down the doer's name.

Angels.

A DISCOURSE, BY WM. SHEPHERD.

(Concluded.)

The relations the angels sustain toward the Church, as taught by our Savior, is taught also by David:—"The angel of the Lord encampeth around about them that fear him, and delivereth them." Ps. 34: 7. The expression "encampeth round about" is one of peculiar significance, and denotes that they serve as a body guard to God's children, which is confirmed by the Psalmist in another place, thus:—"He shall give his angels charge over thee," &c. It appears that David depended very much in the matter of success on the interposition of those shining ones, when in conflict with the enemy; for he says in his prayer to God for assistance, referring to his persecutors,—"Let the angel of the Lord chase them." Ps. 35; 5, 6. Now we may with propriety, under like circumstances with this patriarch, use similar language.

It is very evident that most of the triumphant successes of the people of God, can only be accounted for through angelic interference, originated and directed by Jehovah. This has been proved in the foregoing, hence needs no further references from Scripture. To one, however, we might advert in this connection, showing that in accordance with the divine behests they do inflict the highest punishment. Thus, in the case of the haughty Herod, who, "arrayed in gorgeous attire, sat upon his throne," and delivered an oration, displaying his worldly wisdom with much pomp and eloquence, the people were carried away as by some "strange infatuation," as they are now-a-days with the harangues of some of the "great ones of earth." They "gave a shout saying, it is the voice of a god, and not of a man. And immediately the angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms and gave up the ghost." Acts 12: 21–23. A terrible warning to those that are wise in their own estimation, substantiating the truth that—"He taketh the wise in their own craftiness." We should notice the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, where angels are represented as carrying the beggar into the bosom of Abraham; but as it is simply a parable portraying two classes, viz: the Jews and Gentiles,—angels symbolizing the instrumentalities through which the blessings of the gospel are communicated to the latter, —we pass at once to remark on a passage in Hebrews 2: 5;—"For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world (aion) to come whereof we speak." This Scripture is an important one, and should claim more than ordinary attention. It has a very favorable bearing toward one of the leading ideas advanced in this essay; and teaches to our mind (not only by inference but by good and substantial testimony) that the present dispensation is almost entirely under the control and supervision (in a secondary sense) of the angelic powers; that the greater affairs of the church militant and the general administration and government of this age is, in subjection to or committed unto them by Jehovah through our Lord Jesus the Messiah. How apparent then is it that they occupy a very elevated and responsible position. How few appear conscious of this fact and less feel willing to admit it; but divine testimony removes every doubt on this point and absolutely proves it—that the present economy or age is in subjection and under the control of the Elohim, or heavenly ones of God, and will continue to be thus held, until Christ shall come "the second time" invested with the majesty and energy of Omnipotence and clothed in the infinite splendor of the eternal Godhead, when the world shall be under immediate subjection to him and "the saints of the Most High;" (Dan. 7: 18, 27; Matt. 19: 28; 1 Cor. 6: 2; Rev. 5: 10,) when a new order of things will obtain quite diverse from the present, and the divine edict shall be cheerfully and fully complied with, namely,—"Let all the angels of God worship him."

Now we turn to the Book of the Apocalypse, and behold the wonderful and sublime revelations unfolded to St. John on "the Isle called Patmos," where he was banished "for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ." These stupendous and glorious events, or "things which must shortly come to pass," were presented unto this beloved exile through the instrumentality of an angel, as the record purports. "He (God) sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John." This book treats upon the subject of angels so very profusely—their various offices—the multiform and multiplied duties devolving upon them, and the nature of their employment, that it would extend beyond the limits of an ordinary essay to point out the number of instances, and enter into the minutia of the many passages herein which make mention of them. One, however, we will call your attention to, recorded in the 12th Chap. "And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon: and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, now is come salvation and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused him before our God day and night," &c. We shall not stop here to comment upon this remarkable passage now. Much difference of opinion exists among the learned in regard to its true import. We make but one deduction from it, which will serve our purpose at this time: that is the fact, that there are evil or bad angels existing, as well as goods ones, who are governed and directed by one general head, or commander, who is "called the Devil and Satan," and the work which they are insidiously and constantly engaged in, is one which is diametrically opposite to that of the "holy ones" of God. We learn from the inspired penman that they are fallen intelligences, who once occupied a high and honorable place in the Divine Hierarchy—"angels which kept not their first estate, (or primacy) but left their own habitation," who are "reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." Jude 6: Matt. 25: 41. Their CHIEF, or Prince, for he is called "the prince of the power of the air," and "the prince of this world," (John 12: 31; 14: 30; Eph. 2: 2,) seems at a certain time to have warmly contended with Michael the archangel, in relation to the body of Moses. Jude 9.

"And behold a woman of Canaan . . . cried unto him, saying, have mercy on me, O Lord, thou Son of David! my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil." Matt. 15: 22–28. Some of the "possessed" we find are very young, for they are designated children, as was the case with a man who was tormented with an exceeding vicious deaf and dumb one. See Luke 9: 38–43. How many Mary Magdalenes are there now! How many men like this wanderer from God! How many mothers who have daughters "grievously vexed with the devil!" Angels your march oppose,
Who still in strength excel,
Your secret, sworn, eternal foes,
Countless, invisible.
With rage that never ends,
Their hellish arts they try;
Legions of dire, malicious fiends,
And spirits throned on high.

And here is the origin of those "spirit rappings" which assume to be spirits of our departed friends, or ghosts of the dead, endeavoring to succeed in their ruinous work under the insinuating garb of an "angel of light." It may be as well here to observe, however, that they are all made subservient to the will of the Most High, and can proceed no further than what his power may grant, as in the case of Job. Sometimes he suffers them in various ways to afflict his own people by "sending evil angels among them," (Ps. 78, 49,) delivering them into his hands for their temporal punishment and spoilation, that they may be ultimately "saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." 1 Cor. 5: 5. The final destiny of these fallen angels, with Lucifer their chief, is utter destruction in "everlasting fire," together with all the wicked. Matt. 25: 41; 2 Pet. 2: 4; Jude 6; Rev. 20: 9, 10.

We will now come at once to consider the work of God's holy messengers in the closing scenes of this world. We find that they are to participate to a great extent in the work of "the last day." They are to come forth in this "harvest which is the end of the (aion) world" in the character of "reapers" as Jesus informs us;—"the harvest is the end of the world and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world, (age.) The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity. And shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine," &c. Matt. 13: 30, 39–43. We see by this that the execution of the divine judgments upon the wicked are committed unto them in part. This is clearly brought to view in the Revelations. See the proceedings of the vial-Angels. Rev. 16th chap. The wheat is gathered first, which is the righteous, as we read in another place; "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of the trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Matt. 24: 31. Again, "As it was in the days of Lot . . . even so shall it be when the Son of man is revealed." How was it in the days of Lot? God then in mercy sent his angels to convey that "righteous man" out from the impending fiery destruction. So here again he sends forth his angels into the great Sodom of the world, to gather his people who are to "be caught up to meet the Lord" at his coming, previous to its overthrow and the awful havoc which will ensue; and they will appear visibly, no doubt, as they did to the Sodomites of old. They will also attend our blessed Lord in his second advent to earth, agreeably to his own words: "The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his holy angels." "The Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him." Matt. 16: 27; 25: 31; Mark 8: 38. The Apostle says that "The Lord Jesus shall be manifested from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel . . . who shall be punished with everlasting destruction," &c. 2 Thess. 1: 7–9. Here we have them again officiating as the executioners of Jehovah's judgments upon the wicked in concert with Christ. Their number in attending our beloved Redeemer in his glorious Epiphany and attending him through the final [illegible] large and mighty. Daniel had a glimpse of the magnificent scene in vision, and he thus enumerates them: "thousands of thousands . . . ten thousand times ten thousand." Again he says "one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven," &c. The phrase here—"clouds of heaven"—obviously denotes vast bodies of angels which will appear like so many gorgeous clouds in the firmament, and this comports with what the Revelator affirms—"Behold he cometh with clouds," &c. Dan. 7: 10; Rev. 1: 7.

Once more. As we have good ground to believe that they took no trifling part in the creation, so we think that they will bear an important part in the resurrection of those "who sleep in Jesus." The Apostle represents some as saying, "How are the dead raised up," &c. We answer, There are several passages in Scripture which strongly indicate that the dead may be raised through the agency of those superior angels, "who are great in might," that "the power of God" or the divine energy may be exerted through their instrumentality, and thus the sleeping saints resurrected and brought forth! It is true, Jesus says, "I will raise him (the believer) up at the last day." But it does not necessarily follow that he himself personally will accomplish the work. Many things are predicted of him, as also of the Father, which are consummated through various agencies of divine appointment. It is obvious that angelic interposition was displayed in the resurrection of the Lord Jesus himself; and though angels did not actually raise his lifeless form to the being of an endless life, yet we know that on the morning of his resurrection there was "a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door (of his sepulchre) and sat upon it." Matt. 28: 2. And then again Jesus declares, in "the last day" "that he will send forth his angels to gather his elect." Now we certainly know that many of his "elect" sleep in the dust of the earth awaiting their resuscitation. We have reason to believe that Michael the archangel resurrected the body of Moses; from the circumstance of his contending with the devil or the devil with him about "who has the power of death;" and the fact of Moses appearing on the Mount of Transfiguration. We know that they are to accompany our blessed Lord in his descent with the voice of the Archangel (now do not let us confound the Archangel with Christ) and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise." But be this as it may, in the glorious advent of the Messiah, myriads of angels, as a royal body guard and shining retinue, will attend him with a great sound of a trumpet, and the most ravishing music that ever yet has greeted human ears, or filled with heavenly melody the circumambient air. "The dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive (i. e., the sanctified in God, and called to be saints) and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17.

Thus we have hurried through this interesting theme, endeavoring to point out the nature of these celestial beings; the various relations they sustain in the Divine government; the character of their work in primal ages; the position they occupy under the Christian dispensation; the variety of duties they perform in the superhuman scheme of man's redemption; the majesty of their work in the coming and final crisis of the world; showing conclusively that they have ever stood ready, and now do, at the bid of the Almighty, to cheerfully do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word. [illegible] heirs of salvation;" and that God has given his angels charge over such. May it be your happiness and mine, beloved of God, to ever be the happy recipients of their blessed ministrations, their anxious solicitude and guardian care, even until our adorable Life-giver and Messiah shall be manifested from the heavens, the kingdoms of this world become by right of inheritance his own, and he sway the righteous sceptre (through unlimited dominion, and reign triumphant over universal empire in the majesty of his power, subduing and finally putting all enemies under his feet. When, in joyful, open vision, "We shall come to Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels; to the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to God the judge of all . . . and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant." Heb. 12; 22–24. Where Jehovah's will shall be done upon earth, as it is now in heaven; and there in happy concert with those angels who stand encircling the throne, cast our crowns before Him, singing the glad anthem—"Salvation unto our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created. Blessing . . . wisdom . . . and thanksgiving . . . honor and power and might be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen."

In view of this heavenly token of the divine solicitude and care, how striking is the argument of the Apostle—"He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" Such marked expressions of God's love and tender concern cannot but urge us betimes, with David, to call upon even the inanimate creation and "every thing that hath breath" to break forth from their long silence in exulting praise unto the glorious Jehovah. "Praise ye the Lord!" Ps. 150.

"O for this love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break;
And all harmonious human tongues
The Savior's praises speak!

Angels, assist our mighty joys,
Strike all your harps of gold;
But when you raise your highest notes,
His love can ne'er be told!"

And now, to any who may have followed us in our discourse, who are yet wanderers from God, still impenitent, (Dan. 4: 13,) we would say—Come to the waters! Come, taste and see that the Lord is good! Ho! every one that thirsteth, let them come and partake of the precious waters of life freely! Come, ere the bright sun of the gospel day shall suddenly sink in the horizon of this dispensation, to warm the sinner's heart, or illume his mind no more forever! Come! in this brief period yet allotted—the evening of the day—this latest hour! Come to the banquet! throw aside thy worldly garments, put on the "wedding robe," and hasten to the feast, preparatory to the "marriage supper of the Lamb," ere the door of the "guest-chamber" shall close against thee forever! O, hearken to mercy's closing invitation! "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the Scriptures hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." O hasten, then, unto the infinite Fountain of light, of love, and everlasting life, and be saved now from sin, and glorified in the day of his appearing. "Praise ye Him all his angels." The grace of our Lord Jesus the Messiah be with all the saints. Amen.

HOW TO REPROVE.—Reprove mildly and sweetly; in the calmest manner, in the gentlest terms; not in a haughty or imperious way, not hastily or fiercely; not with sour looks, or in bitter language; for these ways do beget all the evil, and hinder the best effects of reproof. They do certainly inflame and disturb the person reproved. They breed wrath, disdain and hatred against the reprover, but do not so well enlighten the man to see his error, or affect him with kindly sense of the miscarriage, or dispose him to correct his fault. Such reproofs look rather like the wounds and persecutions of enmity than as remedies administered by a friendly hand; they harden men with stomach, and they seem to stand upon such occasion. If reproof doth not savor of humanity, it signifieth nothing; it must be like a bitter pill [illegible] in gold, and tempered with sugar, [illegible] [illegible] —Barrow.

For the Crisis.

What is a Christian?

Does going to church from Sabbath to Sabbath, going to the communion table, consenting to be baptized, saying long prayers, looking grave in religious meetings, and living a good, moral life, constitute a man a real christian? No; a person may do all these things and not be a christian. Yea, more; a man may speak with the tongues of men and of angels; he may have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; he may have all faith, so that he could remove mountains; he may bestow all his goods to feed the poor, and give his body to be burned, and yet be destitute of pure charity, (or love to God;) and of course he is not a christian; he is no better than a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal—he is nothing, nothing yet as he should be. Let me ask again, who is a christian? He is one who daily lives and moves in the elements of virtue, truth and right. He has no absolute will of his own. His interest is the interest of his Maker. He lives for the glory of his God and the welfare of mankind, and not for his own individual gratification and benefit alone. The christian feels that he is "bought with a price," and that all he is, and all he has, must be forever consecrated unto the service of his Divine Lord; and that he must continually glorify God, who has graciously saved him, with all the powers and faculties of his body and soul.

Now look at the real christian. His actions are those of a helper, a friend, a brother; and his words are words of heavenly, useful instruction, of kindness and of truth. He is a ministering angel among the sorrowing and suffering. He rejoices with those that rejoice, and weeps with those that weep. He makes the widowed heart to sing for gladness, and the eyes and ears of the fatherless daily praise his name for benefits received from him. Thus the real christian virtually becomes eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, a defence to the innocent, and the succorer of the helpless. Such is the man who has counted the cost of giving all for Christ. Such a one is indeed unknown and yet well known; poor, yet making many rich. Wicked men may scoff at him, they may pretend to despise his hope, and they may deride his faith and devotion; but they are compelled to admire his consistency and benevolence. To all such precious ones, (for I feel that they are few and far between,) let me say, in the language of the Savior, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father in heaven." The Lord knoweth them that are his; and when he comes and sits upon the throne of his glory, he will say to all the pious of all ages, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

And now my brethren and sisters in Christ, and all who may read this article, let us be sure to put off the OLD MAN, and let us serve God as new creatures.

From Elder S. S. Brewer.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say through the Crisis, to the many friends that have written to me within the last five weeks, the only apology for their not receiving an answer is the fact that I have been absent, and now I must plead a few days' extension. If the Lord will, I shall try and pay you all.

During my visiting, I have enjoyed many happy meetings, and many happy greetings. And in the different places, seen many happy faces. Heard many things that made me glad, and many things that made me sad. Heard some rare, delightful singing,—the notes seem yet around me ringing. Heard some preaching that seemed good; And some for me I found not food. Assist me, Lord, that I may be, At all times blest and owned by thee; That I may keep my armor bright, And walk well pleasing in thy sight.

About our meetings in the grove, I've had no time to speak above. I have of them some things to say, If the Lord will, some future day. Lord, help me with a single eye, To realize the judgment nigh; That when in judgment I must stand, O place me, Lord, at thy right hand. Dear reader, may I meet you there, With all the saints the kingdom share. Amen.

The Soul.—No. 3.

In our last we commenced examining Gen. 2: 7, to ascertain the primary use of soul. We had found the word nephesh, here rendered soul, was first applied to all living creatures, in the first chapter of Genesis, and that it represented the whole being and we could find no intimation that the word had a different meaning in Gen. 2: 7.

We will now continue the examination, in order to ascertain the signification of nephesh in its primary use. Turn to Ex. 12: 16, 19.

"And in the first day there shall be a holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be a holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man (nephesh, marg. soul.) must eat. . . . Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses; for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul (nephesh) shall be cut off."

It will be seen from these passages that man and soul are translated from the same original word, and represent the same being. The man eats and the soul eats. We think it plain to every candid reader that the word nephesh in these texts represents the whole accountable being, called man or soul. Parallel with the foregoing, we read in Lev. 7; 25 and 17: 15, that, "Whosoever eateth the fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, even the soul (nephesh) that eateth it shall be cut off from his people. . . . And every soul (nephesh) that eateth that which died of itself," &c. Can we suppose for one moment that the man or soul (nephesh) which is capable of eating animals, is some indescribable, "immaterial," "uncompounded," "indivisible," "indestructible," "intangible" "essence," that "lives in the body just as a man lives in a house?" In Gen. 2: 16, we read, "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat." It will be noticed that the pronoun thou stands for the noun man, and cannot properly be made to represent any more or less. But "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground;" and says to him after he had eaten the forbidden fruit, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust (not heaven) shalt thou return." Gen. 3: 19. He could not return to the theological hell, for he had never been there. But when we let the Lord mean as he says, how plain is the verse last quoted; indeed, we do not see how it could be made more so. But if the Lord intended to teach us that when a man dies he is still alive, he has a very blind and strange way of expressing it. If men should talk so, we should say they meant to deceive us. Where is Adam now? If he has not died and returned to the ground, but is alive, then the Lord has broken his word, and Satan is cleared from the charge of being "a liar," when he said, in Gen. 3: 4, "Ye shall not surely die." If man does not die, he needs no resurrection.

Says Wm. Tyndale * in answer to Thomas More, the Platonist,

"And ye, in putting them [souls] in heaven, hell, and purgatory, destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection. . . . If the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels be? And then what cause is there of the resurrection?"

Tyndale's is a very reasonable question, but a hard one to answer. Justyn Martyr (one of the "christian fathers," who had been a Platonist,) says, "If you meet with some who are called christians, (meaning Gnostics †) who dare calumniate the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, and who say that there is no resurrection of the dead, but that at death their souls are received up into heaven, do not regard them as christians." [Dial. Trypho.]

We see the reason why Paul says, "Beware, lest any man spoil you through philosophy." The church was probably never in more danger on this point, than at the present time; for that same old Platonic philosophy is being revived in this generation, and is palmed off upon the church and people for truth; while truly, nothing is more opposed. Its advocates will allow us to believe the Bible, if we will only adopt the "double" meaning,—let them put their "construction" upon it. If the devil can but persuade us that the Scriptures have two meanings, he is quite sure of inserting the second and mystical one, by means of which he can lead us, in the end, to lose our confidence in the word of God, and turn us aside to fables. Reader, beware! we are living in "perilous times."

Let us look, now, at a few more examples of the use of nephesh. Numbers 35: 11. "Then ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person (nephesh) at unawares." From this passage, we learn that a nephesh, soul or person, may be killed. Hence, we read in Joshua 10: 28, "And that day Joshua took Makkedah, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and the king thereof he utterly destroyed, them, and all the souls (nephesh) that were therein."

Jer. 52: 29. "In the eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar he carried away captive from Jerusalem eight hundred and thirty and two persons, (nephesh, marg. souls.) Peter says, "eight souls were saved by water," at the time of the flood. When the Revelator was giving an account of the vials, in which "is filled up the wrath of God," he says in Rev. 16: 3, "And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man; and every living soul died in the sea."

Without quoting further examples, we think it will be plain to all, that the primary use of nephesh, (Heb.) and psukee, (Greek) indicates the whole man, or animal; is equally applicable to both, and represents the entire organism, which dies when "the breath of life" is taken away; then the man—the soul or person—returns to "dust," to await the resurrection "at the last day."

In speaking of Eccl. 9: 10, where it is said, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest;" Luther says,—

"Another proof that the dead are insensible. Solomon thinks, therefore, that the dead are altogether asleep, and think of nothing. They lie, not reckoning days or years, but when awakened, will seem to themselves to have slept scarcely a moment." [Debt and Grace, p. 258.

† ["The Gnostics were a sect of philosophers that arose in the first ages of christianity, who pretended that they were the only men who had a true knowledge of the christian religion. They formed for themselves a system of theology, agreeable to the philosophy of Pythagoras and Plato, to which they accommodated their interpretation of Scripture. They held that all natures, intelligible, intellectual, and material, are derived by successive emanations from the infinite fountain of Deity. . . These doctrines were derived from the oriental philosophy."]

A New Tract.

In compliance with a request of several of our brethren, we purpose to issue a tract this week, entitled, "WHAT IS MAN?" or a Bible view of his creation, his soul and spirit, his death and connection with hell.

It will consist of about 32 pp. Price, single copy, 5 cts.; per hundred $3.00. Postage 1 ct.

New Translation.

John P. Jewett & Co., 20 Washington Street, Boston, have just published a new and valuable translation of the New Testament,—"Translated from the Original Greek, with Chronological Arrangement of Sacred Books, and Improved Divisions of Chapters and Verses. By Leicester Ambrose Sawyer. 1 Vol. 8 vo. pp. 423. Published by John P. Jewett & Co., 20 Washington Street, Boston. Price $1 in cloth, and $1.25 in morocco, postage paid.

Mr. Sawyer has the reputation of being a distinguished scholar. He has been engaged some twenty years in perfecting his translation. He says in his preface,

"This is not a work of compromises, or of conjectural interpretations of the sacred Scriptures, neither is it a paraphrase, but a strict literal rendering. It neither adds nor takes away; but aims to express the original with the utmost clearness and force, and with the utmost precision. It adopts, however, except in the prayers, a thoroughly modern style, and makes freely whatever changes are necessary for this purpose."

We have not had time to examine the translation with any degree of care, but we are satisfied, from a hasty look, that it will be a valuable acquisition to the Bible student. If the people would understand the Scriptures, it is important that they examine different translations. One such new translation is of more real value to the christian, than all the "monthlies" and other light reading in the world. Get the book and read it carefully, observe its precepts, and you will gain eternal life. Every family should have a copy.

From Sr. A. Mussey.

BRO. GRANT:—It has been some time since I have written to my brethren through the Crisis, and as I have been solicited by many of my old acquaintances in my wanderings the summer past to write, I again resume my pen, feeling it not only a duty but a privilege thus to do.

My journey through this life seems to be a lonely and toilsome one, yet I feel the brighter day is about to dawn, when all my wanderings will cease, and I shall be at home, at rest forever, with Jesus and all my beloved friends, in Eden's blooming bowers. The widow's God is still my constant companion; He is on my right hand and on my left, that I shall not be moved. Having no home I can call my own since the death of my companion and my beloved son, I have visited brethren and friends the summer past, have formed some happy associations with brethren and sisters, whom I hope to meet in God's everlasting kingdom. In Boston I was permitted to enjoy some meetings, which I trust will never be forgotten. Hope to meet them again soon,

"Where congregations ne'er break up,
And Sabbaths never end."

Visited brethren at Portsmouth. A goodly company are still on their journey to the promised land; and are resolved to face the storm until He comes who can say to the winds and the waves, "be still," and they will obey. Death, that cruel enemy, has entered their ranks since I left them, and taken a blooming daughter and a lovely christian from their midst. God strengthen that father and mother to look upward, hoping for the morning to dawn when dear Anna will awake, and in immortal bloom will live to die no more. While viewing the trackless ocean, its rough billows roaring, and its white waves dashing, wave after wave, grand and sublime, I thought of the days of our Savior, and the faith of Peter; when he heard the voice of him he loved, and beheld him walking upon the water; when he exclaimed, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee. At the answer, come! he leaps into the sea, with strong faith to buoy him up above the waves, while his eyes were fixed upon the Lord; but the moment he looks upon the waves he sinks; but he cries, Lord, save, or I perish! He is saved; and that strong arm carries him safe to land. So with us, my brethren and sisters; while we look upon the waves that dash against us, we sink like Peter; but he who heard Peter's cries will hear us, and will bring us safe into port.

I was permitted to enjoy the Conference at Warner, and I would say for the encouragement of others, it was a profitable season to all our souls, who attended. Brethren came together in the fullness of the gospel of Christ. Our preaching was excellent; our exhortations and songs were attended by the Spirit of God, and we were united as the heart of one man, to serve the true and living God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. That faith and spirit that united us together, when first we embraced the Advent doctrine, was manifest in that meeting; we parted with the blessed assurance, that if we hold fast the profession of our faith firm unto the end, we shall soon meet where we shall no more take the parting hand. O! may the faith of the Lord's immediate coming prevail among us, that we may be more united to labor for God and the salvation of our fellow-men. A few more conflicts and we shall be there. Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Our Conference at Lake Village was a profitable season to us all. The Church has been strengthened to hold fast the profession of her faith without wavering, firm unto the end, believing the time close at hand when the chief Shepherd shall appear and give us a crown of life that fadeth not away. One interesting part of our Conference here, was the setting apart of our beloved Bro. Thatcher Piper for the work of the ministry. It was truly a solemn and interesting season. Prayer by Bro. Lock; charge by Bro. Preble; right hand of fellowship by Bro. Morse. Father, endow thy ministering servants with power from on high, that they may go forth like flaming heralds, proclaiming the day of vengeance of our God. Let the weak say, I am strong. Fear not, behold your God will come, even God, with a recompense; He will come and save you.

In yonder clouds we'll see him soon,
In all his bright array;
The morning light disperse the gloom,
And bring an endless day,
The trump of God will wake the dead,
Loved friends will live again;
Made like unto their glorious Head,
In Eden's bowers will reign.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been looking in the Crisis for something more concerning the campmeeting at Collinsville. As nothing has appeared, I wish to say a little about the latter part of the meeting, which was too good to go unnoticed.

I think you left Saturday morning. Soon after Bro. Hastings began to preach it commenced raining, and the service at the stand was broken up. Not so, however, the interest and harmony of the meeting. Meetings were held in the tents during the day and evening,—preaching by Bro. J. Morgan, Flavel, Goodrich, and Sr. Fenn, in the afternoon, Bro. F. presenting his argument on Time.

The rain ceased before night, and on Lord's day morning a cloudless sky, with its cheering sunbeams, greeted our waking eyes. It was a morning not soon to be forgotten. A holy, heavenly influence pervaded the encampment, and shone out in the very countenances of the dear saints. At an early hour all gathered at the stand for a love-feast, (rightly named in this instance.) The blessing of God rested upon us, and his Spirit conducted the meeting. One hundred and seventy-three testimonies, I think, were given in the space of one hour, and it seemed as if the very angels in heaven rejoiced, as they stooped to listen to them.

Preaching in the morning by Bro. Hastings, and by Bro. Burnham in the afternoon. It was estimated that between four and five thousand persons were on the ground, and the perfect order that was maintained, was remarkable. The very quietude that reigned told how deeply interesting were the glorious truths presented, and the solemn appeals made, to that listening multitude. The Lord grant that the great reckoning day may show much fruit as the result.

At the close of the afternoon service, we repaired to the river's side, where Bro. Mathewson buried in baptism seven happy believers in Jesus. How blessed to walk in the ordinances of the gospel, and keep the commandments of God. Truly in keeping them there is great reward.

Bro. Hastings preached again in the evening, after which, as requested, the multitude quietly withdrew, leaving the people of God to enjoy a season of communion at the table of the Lord. It was an hour of deep interest and solemnity. Tables were quickly and quietly arranged through the long aisle, and there in the calm stillness of that evening hour, with the broad canopy of heaven for our tent, and the stars of night looking down upon, and keeping watch over us, about three hundred waiting ones sat down to commemorate our Savior's dying love, in hope of his future glory, for which we look and pray. May the remembrance of that hour never pass away, until He whose name we honor shall come to redeem us.

Monday morning dawned brightly upon us, and with it came the hour for separation. Although the tear-drop would fall, yet in joyous hope and with songs of praise we parted; and thus ended one of the best meetings we have ever held, and the best I ever attended.

I praise the Lord that even in old Connecticut, as well as in other States, there are still found some true hearted, valiant soldiers of the cross, who are determined to contend earnestly for the "faith once delivered to the saints," and see the end of the christian race, and who will not admit for one moment, that they have been following "cunningly devised fables," while they have been looking and waiting for the Son of God from heaven. May the Lord bless his own people, his own cause, and his own truth, to the salvation of men, and the glory of his own great name. Amen.

TREAD SOFTLY.—The Jews would not willingly tread upon the smallest piece of paper in their way, but took it; for, possibly, said they, the name of God may be on it. Though there was a little superstition in this, yet, truly, there is nothing but religion in it, if we apply it to men. Trample not on any; there may be some work of grace there that thou knowest not of. The name of God may be written upon that soul thou treadest on; it may be a soul that Christ thought so much of as to give his precious blood for it; therefore despise it not.—Leighton.

☞ The rich are inclined to believe that they are superior to other men, and other men do all they possibly can to fortify them in that belief.

heirs of salvation;" and that God has given his angels charge over such. May it be your happiness and mine, beloved of God, to ever be the happy recipients of their blessed ministrations, their anxious solicitude and guardian care, even until our adorable Life-giver and Messiah shall be manifested from the heavens, the kingdoms of this world become by right of inheritance his own, and he sway the righteous sceptre (through unlimited dominion,) and reign triumphant over universal empire in the majesty of his power, subduing and finally putting all enemies under his feet. When in joyful, open vision, "We shall come to Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels; to the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to God the judge of all . . . and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant." Heb. 12; 22-24. Where Jehovah's will shall be done upon earth, as it is now in heaven; and there in happy concert with those angels who stand encircling the throne, cast our crowns before Him, singing the glad anthem—"Salvation unto our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created. Blessing . . . wisdom . . . and thanksgiving . . . honor and power and might be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen."

In view of this heavenly token of the divine solicitude and care, how striking is the argument of the Apostle—"He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" Such marked expressions of God's love and tender concern cannot but urge us betimes, with David, to call upon even the inanimate creation and "every thing that hath breath" to break forth from their long silence in exulting praise unto the glorious Jehovah. "Praise ye the Lord!" Ps. 150.

"O for this love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break;
And all harmonious human tongues
The Savior's praises speak!

Angels, assist our mighty joys,
Strike all your harps of gold;
But when you raise your highest notes,
His love can ne'er be told!"

And now, to any who may have followed us in our discourse, who are yet wanderers from God, still impenitent, (Dan. 4; 13,) we would say.—Come to the waters! Come, taste and see that the Lord is good! Ho! every one that thirsteth, let them come and partake of the precious waters of life freely! Come, ere the bright sun of the gospel day shall suddenly sink in the horizon of this dispensation, to warm the sinner's heart, or illume his mind no more forever! Come! in this brief period yet allotted—the evening of the day—this latest hour! Come to the banquet! throw aside thy worldly garments, put on the "wedding robe," and hasten to the feast, preparatory to the "marriage supper of the Lamb," ere the door of the "guest-chamber" shall close against thee forever! O, hearken to mercy's closing invitation! "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the Scriptures hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." O hasten, then, unto the infinite Fountain of light, of love, and everlasting life, and be saved now from sin, and glorified in the day of his appearing. "Praise ye Him all his angels." The grace of our Lord Jesus the Messiah be with all the saints. Amen.

How to Reprove.—Reprove mildly and sweetly; in the calmest manner, in the gentlest terms; not in a haughty or imperious way, not hastily or fiercely; not with sour looks, or in bitter language; for these ways do beget all the evil, and hinder the best effects of reproof. They do certainly inflame and disturb the person reproved. They breed wrath, disdain and hatred against the reprover, but do not so well enlighten the man to see his error, or affect him with kindly sense of the miscarriage, or dispose him to correct his fault. Such reproofs look rather like the wounds and persecutions of enmity than as remedies ministered by a friendly hand; they harden men with stomach, and they scorn to mend upon such occasion. If reproof doth not savor of humanity, it signifieth nothing; it must be like a bitter pill wrapt in gold, and tempered with sugar, otherwise it would not go down or work effectually.—Isaac Barrow.

For the Crisis.

Who is a Christian?

Does going to church from Sabbath to Sabbath, going to the communion table, consenting to be baptised, saying long prayers, looking grave in religious meetings, and living a good, moral life, constitute a man a real christian? No; a person may do all these things and not be a christian. Yea, more; a man may speak with the tongues of men and of angels; he may have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; he may have all faith, so that he could remove mountains; he may bestow all his goods to feed the poor, and give his body to be burned, and yet be destitute of pure charity, (or love to God;) and of course he is not a christian; he is no better than a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal—he is nothing, nothing yet as he should be. Let me ask again, who is a christian? He is one who daily lives and moves in the elements of virtue, truth and right. He has no absolute will of his own. His interest is the interest of his Maker. He lives for the glory of his God and the welfare of mankind, and not for his own individual gratification and benefit alone. The christian feels that he is "bought with a price," and that all he is, and all he has, must be forever consecrated unto the service of his Divine Lord; and that he must continually glorify God, who has graciously saved him, with all the powers and faculties of his body and soul.

Now look at the real christian. His actions are those of a helper, a friend, a brother; and his words are words of heavenly, useful instruction, of kindness and of truth. He is a ministering angel among the sorrowing and suffering. He rejoices with those that rejoice, and weeps with those that weep. He makes the widowed heart to sing for gladness, and the eyes and ears of the fatherless daily praise his name for benefits received from him. Thus the real christian virtually becomes eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, a defence to the innocent, and the succorer of the helpless. Such is the man who has counted the cost of giving all for Christ. Such a one is indeed unknown and yet well known; poor, yet making many rich. Wicked men may scoff at him, they may pretend to despise his hope, and they may deride his faith and devotion; but they are compelled to admire his consistency and benevolence. To all such precious ones, (for I feel that they are few and far between,) let me say, in the language of the Savior, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father in heaven." The Lord knoweth them that are his; and when he comes and sits upon the throne of his glory, he will say to all the pious of all ages, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

And now my brethren and sisters in Christ, and all who may read this article, let us be sure to put off the OLD MAN, and let us serve God as new creatures.

From Elder S. S. Brewer.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I wish to say through the Crisis, to the many friends that have written to me within the last five weeks, the only apology for their not receiving an answer is the fact that I have been absent, and now I must plead a few days' extension. If the Lord will, I shall try and pay you all.

During my visiting, I have enjoyed many happy meetings, and many happy greetings. And in the different places, seen many happy faces. Heard many things that made me glad, and many things that made me sad. Heard some rare, delightful singing,—the notes seem yet around me ringing. Heard some preaching that seemed good; And some for me I found not food. Assist me, Lord, that I may be, At all times blest and owned by thee; That I may keep my armor bright, And walk well pleasing in thy sight.

About our meetings in the grove, I've had no time to speak above. I have of them some things to say, If the Lord will, some future day. Lord, help me with a single eye, To realize the judgment nigh; That when in judgment I must stand, O place me, Lord, at thy right hand. Dear reader, may I meet you there, With all the saints the kingdom share. Amen.

The Soul.—No. 3.

In our last we commenced examining Gen. 2: 7, to ascertain the primary use of soul. We had found the word nephesh, here rendered soul, was first applied to all living creatures, in the first chapter of Genesis, and that it represented the whole being and we could find no intimation that the word had a different meaning in Gen. 2: 7.

We will now continue the examination, in order to ascertain the signification of nephesh in its primary use. Turn to Ex. 12; 16, 19.

"And in the first day there shall be a holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be a holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man (nephesh, marg. soul.) must eat. . . . Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses; for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul (nephesh) shall be cut off."

It will be seen from these passages that man and soul are translated from the same original word, and represent the same being. The man eats and the soul eats. We think it plain to every candid reader that the word nephesh in these texts represents the whole accountable being, called man or soul. Parallel with the foregoing, we read in Lev. 7; 25 and 17: 15, that, "Whosoever eateth the fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, even the soul (nephesh) that eateth it shall be cut off from his people. . . . And every soul (nephesh) that eateth that which died of itself," &c. Can we suppose for one moment that the man or soul (nephesh) which is capable of eating animals, is some indescribable, "immaterial," "uncompounded," "indivisible," "indestructible," "intangible" "essence," that "lives in the body just as a man lives in a house?" In Gen. 2: 16, we read, "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat." It will be noticed that the pronoun thou stands for the noun man, and cannot properly be made to represent any more or less. But "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground;" and says to him after he had eaten the forbidden fruit, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust (not heaven) shalt thou return." Gen. 3: 19. He could not *re*turn to the theological hell, for he had never been there. But when we let the Lord mean as he says, how plain is the verse last quoted; indeed, we do not see how it could be made more so. But if the Lord intended to teach us that when a man dies he is still alive, he has a very blind and strange way of expressing it. If men should talk so, we should say they meant to deceive us. Where is Adam now? If he has not died and *re*turned to the ground, but is alive, then the Lord has broken his word, and Satan is cleared from the charge of being "a liar," when he said, in Gen. 3: 4, "Ye shall not surely die." If man does not die, he needs no resurrection.

Says Wm. Tyndale * in answer to Thomas More, the Platonist,

"And ye, in putting them [souls] in heaven, hell, and purgatory, destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection. . . . If the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels be? And then what cause is there of the resurrection?"

Tyndale's is a very reasonable question, but a hard one to answer. Justyn Martyr (one of the "christian fathers," who had been a Platonist,) says, "If you meet with some who are called christians, (meaning Gnostics, †) who dare calumniate the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, and who say that there is no resurrection of the dead, but that at death their souls are received up into heaven, do not regard them as christians." [Dial. Trypho.]

We see the reason why Paul says, "Beware, lest any man spoil you through philosophy." The church was probably never in more danger on this point, than at the present time; for this same old Platonic philosophy is being revived in this generation, and is palmed off upon the church and people for truth; while truly, nothing is more opposed. Its advocates will allow us to believe the Bible, if we will only adopt the "double" meaning,—let them put their "construction" upon it. If the devil can but persuade us that the Scriptures have two meanings, he is quite sure of inserting the second and mystical one, by means of which he can lead us, in the end, to lose our confidence in the word of God, and turn us aside to fables. Reader, beware! we are living in "perilous times."

Let us look, now, at a few more examples of the use of nephesh. Numbers 35: 11. "Then ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person (nephesh) at unawares." From this passage, we learn that a nephesh, soul or person, may be killed. Hence, we read in Joshua 10: 28, "And that day Joshua took Makkedah, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and the king thereof he utterly destroyed, them, and all the souls (nephesh) that were therein."

Jer. 52: 29. "In the eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar he carried away captive from Jerusalem eight hundred and thirty and two persons, (nephesh, marg. souls.) Peter says, "eight souls were saved by water," at the time of the flood. When the Revelator was giving an account of the vials, in which "is filled up the wrath of God," he says in Rev. 16: 3, "And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man; and every living soul died in the sea."

Without quoting further examples, we think it will be plain to all, that the primary use of nephesh, (Heb.) and psukee, (Greek) indicates the whole man, or animal; is equally applicable to both, and represents the entire organism, which dies when "the breath of life" is taken away; then the man—the soul or person—returns to "dust," to await the resurrection "at the last day."

In speaking of Eccl. 9: 10, where it is said, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest;" Luther says,—

"Another proof that the dead are insensible. Solomon thinks, therefore, that the dead are altogether asleep, and think of nothing. They lie, not reckoning days or years, but when awakened, will seem to themselves to have slept scarcely a moment." [Debt and Grace, p. 258.

† ["The Gnostics were a sect of philosophers that arose in the first ages of christianity, who pretended that they were the only men who had a true knowledge of the christian religion. They formed for themselves a system of theology, agreeable to the philosophy of Pythagoras and Plato, to which they accommodated their interpretation of Scripture. They held that all natures, intelligible, intellectual, and material, are derived by successive emanations from the infinite fountain of Deity. . . . These doctrines were derived from the oriental philosophy."]

A New Tract.

In compliance with a request of several of our brethren, we purpose to issue a tract this week, entitled, "What is Man?" or a Bible view of his creation, his soul and spirit, his death and connection with hell.

It will consist of about 32 pp. Price, single copy, 5 cts.; per hundred $3.00. Postage 1 ct.

New Translation.

John P. Jewett & Co., 20 Washington Street, Boston, have just published a new and valuable translation of the New Testament,—"Translated from the Original Greek, with Chronological Arrangement of Sacred Books, and Improved Divisions of Chapters and Verses. By Leicester Ambrose Sawyer. 1 Vol. 8 vo. pp. 423. Published by John P. Jewett & Co., 20 Washington Street, Boston. Price $1 in cloth, and $1.25 in morocco, postage paid.

Mr. Sawyer has the reputation of being a distinguished scholar. He has been engaged some twenty years in perfecting his translation. He says in his preface,

"This is not a work of compromises, or of conjectural interpretations of the sacred Scriptures, neither is it a paraphrase, but a strict literal rendering. It neither adds nor takes away; but aims to express the original with the utmost clearness and force, and with the utmost precision. It adopts, however, except in the prayers, a thoroughly modern style, and makes freely whatever changes are necessary for this purpose."

We have not had time to examine the translation with any degree of care, but we are satisfied, from a hasty look, that it will be a valuable acquisition to the Bible student. If the people would understand the Scriptures, it is important that they examine different translations. One such new translation is of more real value to the christian, than all the "monthlies" and other light reading in the world. Get the book and read it carefully, observe its precepts, and you will gain eternal life. Every family should have a copy.

From Sr. A. Mussey.

Bro. Grant:—It has been some time since I have written to my brethren through the Crisis, and as I have been solicited by many of my old acquaintances in my wanderings the summer past to write, I again resume my pen, feeling it not only a duty but a privilege thus to do.

My journey through this life seems to be a lonely and toilsome one, yet I feel the brighter day is about to dawn, when all my wanderings will cease, and I shall be at home, at rest forever, with Jesus and all my beloved friends, in Eden's blooming bowers. The widow's God is still my constant companion; He is on my right hand and on my left, that I shall not be moved. Having no home I can call my own since the death of my companion and my beloved son, I have visited brethren and friends the summer past, have formed some happy associations with brethren and sisters, whom I hope to meet in God's everlasting kingdom. In Boston I was permitted to enjoy some meetings, which I trust will never be forgotten. Hope to meet them again soon,

"Where congregations ne'er break up,
And Sabbaths never end."

Visited brethren at Portsmouth. A goodly company are still on their journey to the promised land; and are resolved to face the storm until He comes who can say to the winds and the waves, "be still," and they will obey. Death, that cruel enemy, has entered their ranks since I left them, and taken a blooming daughter and a lovely christian from their midst. God strengthen that father and mother to look upward, hoping for the morning to dawn when dear Anna will awake, and in immortal bloom will live to die no more. While viewing the trackless ocean, its rough billows roaring, and its white waves dashing, wave after wave, grand and sublime, I thought of the days of our Savior, and the faith of Peter; when he heard the voice of him he loved, and beheld him walking upon the water; when he exclaimed, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee. At the answer, come! he leaps into the sea, with strong faith to buoy him up above the waves, while his eyes were fixed upon the Lord; but the moment he looks upon the waves he sinks; but he cries, Lord, save, or I perish! He is saved; and that strong arm carries him safe to land. So with us, my brethren and sisters; while we look upon the waves that dash against us, we sink like Peter; but he who heard Peter's cries will hear us, and will bring us safe into port.

I was permitted to enjoy the Conference at Warner, and I would say for the encouragement of others, it was a profitable season to all our souls, who attended. Brethren came together in the fullness of the gospel of Christ. Our preaching was excellent; our exhortations and songs were attended by the Spirit of God, and we were united as the heart of one man, to serve the true and living God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. That faith and spirit that united us together, when first we embraced the Advent doctrine, was manifest in that meeting; we parted with the blessed assurance, that if we hold fast the profession of our faith firm unto the end, we shall soon meet where we shall no more take the parting hand. O! may the faith of the Lord's immediate coming prevail among us, that we may be more united to labor for God and the salvation of our fellow-men. A few more conflicts and we shall be there. Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Our Conference at Lake Village was a profitable season to us all. The Church has been strengthened to hold fast the profession of her faith without wavering, firm unto the end, believing the time close at hand when the chief Shepherd shall appear and give us a crown of life that fadeth not away. One interesting part of our Conference here, was the setting apart of our beloved Bro. Thatcher Piper for the work of the ministry. It was truly a solemn and interesting season. Prayer by Bro. Lock; charge by Bro. Preble; right hand of fellowship by Bro. Morse. Father, endow thy ministering servants with power from on high, that they may go forth like flaming heralds, proclaiming the day of vengeance of our God. Let the weak say, I am strong. Fear not, behold your God will come, even God, with a recompense; He will come and save you.

In yonder clouds we'll see him soon,
In all his bright array;
The morning light disperse the gloom,
And bring an endless day,
The trump of God will wake the dead,
Loved friends will live again;
Made like unto their glorious Head,
In Eden's bowers will reign.

From Sr. L. J. Beach.

Bro. Grant:—I have been looking in the Crisis for something more concerning the campmeeting at Collinsville. As nothing has appeared, I wish to say a little about the latter part of the meeting, which was too good to go unnoticed.

I think you left Saturday morning. Soon after Bro. Hastings began to preach it commenced raining, and the service at the stand was broken up. Not so, however, the interest and harmony of the meeting. Meetings were held in the tents during the day and evening,—preaching by Brn. J. Morgan, Flavel, Goodrich, and Sr. Fenn, in the afternoon, Bro. F. presenting his argument on Time.

The rain ceased before night, and on Lord's day morning a cloudless sky, with its cheering sunbeams, greeted our waking eyes. It was a morning not soon to be forgotten. A holy, heavenly influence pervaded the encampment, and shone out in the very countenances of the dear saints. At an early hour all gathered at the stand for a love-feast, (rightly named in this instance.) The blessing of God rested upon us, and his Spirit conducted the meeting. One hundred and seventy-three testimonies, I think, were given in the space of one hour, and it seemed as if the very angels in heaven rejoiced, as they stooped to listen to them.

Preaching in the morning by Bro. Hastings, and by Bro. Burnham in the afternoon. It was estimated that between four and five thousand persons were on the ground, and the perfect order that was maintained, was remarkable. The very quietude that reigned told how deeply interesting were the glorious truths presented, and the solemn appeals made, to that listening multitude. The Lord grant that the great reckoning day may show much fruit as the result.

At the close of the afternoon service, we repaired to the river's side, where Bro. Mathewson buried in baptism seven happy believers in Jesus. How blessed to walk in the ordinances of the gospel, and keep the commandments of God. Truly in keeping them there is great reward.

Bro. Hastings preached again in the evening, after which, as requested, the multitude quietly withdrew, leaving the people of God to enjoy a season of communion at the table of the Lord. It was an hour of deep interest and solemnity. Tables were quickly and quietly arranged through the long aisle, and there in the calm stillness of that evening hour, with the broad canopy of heaven for our tent, and the stars of night looking down upon, and keeping watch over us, about three hundred waiting ones sat down to commemorate our Savior's dying love, in hope of his future glory, for which we look and pray. May the remembrance of that hour never pass away, until He whose name we honor shall come to redeem us.

Monday morning dawned brightly upon us, and with it came the hour for separation. Although the tear-drop would fall, yet in joyous hope and with songs of praise we parted; and thus ended one of the best meetings we have ever held, and the best I ever attended.

I praise the Lord that even in old Connecticut, as well as in other States, there are still found some true hearted, valiant soldiers of the cross, who are determined to contend earnestly for the "faith once delivered to the saints," and see the end of the christian race, and who will not admit for one moment, that they have been following "cunningly devised fables," while they have been looking and waiting for the Son of God from heaven. May the Lord bless his own people, his own cause, and his own truth, to the salvation of men, and the glory of his own great name. Amen.

Tread Softly.—The Jews would not willingly tread upon the smallest piece of paper in their way, but took it; for possibly, said they, the name of God may be on it. Though there was a little superstition in this, yet, truly, there is nothing but religion in it, if we apply it to men. Trample not on any; there may be some work of grace there that thou knowest not of. The name of God may be written upon that soul thou treadest on; it may be a soul that Christ thought so much of as to give his precious blood for it; therefore despise it not.—Leighton.

For the Crisis.

Advent Itinerancy.

Bro. Grant:—As this subject has been introduced, and it being one intimately connected with the prosperity of the church, I think it best to keep it before the people until there is a redress of grievances. As has before been stated, this kind of work must be done, or the cause of truth must suffer; and it seems that there is now a wider field for prospective labor than has ever before been presented to the church; and when shall the men and means be found to occupy these new fields? I think by a little systematizing and self-denial, the latter may be in a tolerable degree furnished. Let us consult the arithmetic upon this subject.

Supposing there are five thousand Advent believers in the United States. At the lowest estimate, the average receipt for missionary purposes ought to be one cent per day for each. There are probably many who think they are not able to give anything, and there are others who could give treble that amount and hardly know it. Let us go into a calculation upon self-denial. Supposing you are about to purchase a coat that will cost ten dollars. Buy one for nine; or if it be any other other article of clothing, male or female, economize in the same proportion, and put the money thus saved into the contribution; and carry this principle out in expenditures for houses, furniture and all the departments of life's expenses, and there would soon be an abundance in the Lord's treasury to support his ministers.

Another important element of success in this and all other objects, is system; but where everything is at loose ends, as has been too much the case in matters relating to the church, it is not to be wondered at that ministers have to suffer in consequence thereof. But it cannot be denied that some who have taken upon themselves this office are somewhat to blame in this matter; for by their precept they have encouraged this state of disorganization in the churches. Some of them have denounced church government, and have pulled down what others have been laboring to build. Some have no doubt supposed that the end was so near that all system and order could be dispensed with; but there is nothing in Scripture to justify any such conclusion.

"Occupy until I come" is just as imperative now, and will be until the sign of the Son of Man is seen. And any body of christians who try to sail over the tempestuous seas of the present time without gospel order, will be inefficient, weak and lame. Yours, &c., D. N. Smith.

Brunswick Conference.

Bro. Grant:—The Conference held in Brunswick last week, was a good season indeed. The Lord was with us of a truth. A good number of brethren and sisters came in from the surrounding towns, and enjoyed a feast of love and union worthy the faith we profess. It was manifest from the first that a better state of feeling existed than had been seen for some time. The people of the vicinity came out to see and hear. God poured out his blessing so that they began publicly to confess their former prejudices, and acknowledge that God was with us, and that they believed we preached the truth. Several were reclaimed; one man converted Sunday eve. We continued until Monday evening, when some six or eight came forward for prayers; some found peace with God through Christ, and others are still seeking. Evening meetings are to continue. Lord, bless and save them. There is a deep and lasting impression left on the minds of many of that people, and some fruit of the meeting will be gathered for the coming kingdom of God. Brn. York, Peter Libby, James Libby, Ingham, Wellcome and Hiram Munger were there, and preached the word. Several other ministers were with us also. Bro. Munger came by request of persons in the village to lecture on Spiritualism, but he rendered us much help in our Conference. Yours in the faith,

I. C. Wellcome.

From Eld. J. Blain.

Having been very busy, and my health rather poor since I came East in May, I have too long omitted to let brethren know in the West where I was, what doing, and why in the East instead of West, as I have heretofore given encouragement of traveling that way. My reason for this course is, that I learned last fall and this spring that I could not be sustained West, nor sell many books till times changed. Times are hard here, but better than West, and I am obtaining a bare support, but not enough to clear me from past debts, which were increased last year by traveling five months and receiving but $18 in donations, or for labors, while my traveling expenses were $50. I had to live on books previously paid for, and which I am now out of, and lack means to reprint. I have, however, engaged a printer in Boston to publish all my works, except the Review of Beecher, and hope brethren who possibly can, will send me help this fall, or as soon as consistent. As I shall probably not be home till December, they can send to me here, care of G. T. Adams, 167 Hanover Street, or to my son-in-law, J. W. Dean, Chicago, Ill., at the Tribune office.

I am prospered this season in scattering books, and in seeing the good effects of my labors more than ever before; but have not time now to give particulars, but will by and by. Truth is gaining fast in Yankee regions, so I would not be understood as complaining nor repining, though difficulties attend my course. No, I am happy in my toilsome labors, though far from "sweet home," and full in the faith that my Master will provide for my wants. The thought has never entered my mind of leaving the Gospel "to serve tables." Brethren, let our daily song be,—

"We'll stem the storm, it won't be long.
The heav'nly port is nigh;
We'll stem the storm, it can't be long,—
We'll anchor by and by."

I sympathize deeply with brethren West, where they have so few to preach the new and blessed truths they love to hear, and when times permit, I shall gladly travel among you again, if life and health be granted by a kind Providence. I would encourage ministering brethren West to labor on—faint not, the reward will be sure and great to pioneers in God's warfare. J. Blain.

My Labors.

Several persons have written to me, from different parts of the country, to come and labor with them this fall and winter. To all such I have to say, that at present I am confined to Boston and vicinity, and probably shall be for some time to come. The interest in Boston still continues and increases. The Chapman (large) Hall is crowded to its utmost capacity, so that it is very difficult to seat the people, with a very select congregation, who come to hear. Our public Bible Class, which is held every Sunday at 2 o'clock, P. M., is very large and interesting. While this state of interest continues, our friends must excuse me, and let me remain here.

From Bro. P. Axe.

Bro. Grant:—I write a few lines for the encouragement of the tried ones who are striving to enter in at the strait gate. Be of good cheer. I praise the Lord for the light I have received in reading the Crisis, and books and tracts on the doctrine of life through Christ, and the blessed hope of the soon coming Jesus. I was a believer in sin's eternity and man's immortality, being taught thus from my youth; but reading the Scriptures, and accepting their literal import, makes all things plain.

I receive much opposition, but by the grace of God I am resolved to do what I can in spreading the truth of the gospel. Some say it matters not what we believe, if we are sincere. I learn we are to be sanctified by believing the truth. May we all cultivate a spirit of love, and have a home in the everlasting kingdom that will soon be set up. Peter Axe.

☞ Sympathy is much more catching than intelligence. Anybody can feel, but everybody cannot understand. Hence pity for a person brought into distress by his own acts, often outweighs all the conviction produced by a knowledge of his crimes.

Obituary Notices.

Found dead in his bed, in Northfield, Mass., on the morning of the 15th of September, Asa S. Hoskin, aged 44 years.

The deceased was in good health when he retired the evening before. It was found upon examination to be the rupture of a blood vessel. Thus has death entered this family and taken from them a dearly beloved brother and son. The subject of this notice was not a professor, but had ever manifested a kind spirit towards God's children. Although he did not communicate his feelings to any one before death, still we cannot but hope to see him in the resurrection morning clad in immortality.

How long, O Death, thou tyrant, shalt thou reign over the earth? Thank God, his children are soon to shout victory over the grave. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

Domestic News.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Dates to the 16th of September. A new treaty has been made with France. The main points yielded to France are, that the French language is to be placed on a level with the English; the duty on liquors to be reduced from $5 to $3 per gallon; French vessels are to be placed on the same footing as Hawaiian; the French Consul to be allowed to exercise judicial functions belonging of right to the Hawaiian Courts.

Bolivia continues in a disturbed state. An attempt was made at La Paz to assassinate the President. He escaped, but Gen. Pradeecio and another gentleman who stood beside him, were shot dead. The assassins had previously proclaimed Gen. Belzu, and attacked the barracks. Tranquility was finally restored, through the promptness and firmness of President Linares.

Peru again threatens war against Ecuador, and has sent two war vessels to that country, with a commission to demand satisfaction for recent insults to their ministers by that Republic.

Ex-President Echinique is said to be in Bolivia, occupied in fermenting revolution against Castilla's government.

FROM MEXICO.

The Times Mexico correspondent states that on the 14th September the Mexican government made discovery of a pretended plot to assassinate the President, his ministry and many prominent citizens, and to give the city up to plunder. The foreigners were openly accused of having concocted this scheme, and government was taking every means to exasperate the people against them. Our minister, Mr. Forsyth, was threatened with an attack on his house, the object being the seizure of foreigners harbored there.

Large numbers of Indians had made their appearance on the Mohave, causing great alarm at San Bernardino. They had attacked and wounded several Americans, and stolen a number of cattle.

St. Louis, Oct. 26.—A dispatch from Fort Independence says that the Santa Fe mail, with dates of the 4th inst., arrived on the 23d. The report of the second battle with the Navajo Indians had been confirmed. Mr. Yost, their agent, formally suspended all relations with them, and he states their wealth consists in 250,000 sheep and 60,000 horses, which, if destroyed, will drive them to desperation, and that a second Florida war may be expected.

NEWS BY THE OVERLAND CALIFORNIA MAIL—INDIAN FIGHT IN OREGON.

St. Louis, Oct. 27.—The overland mail, which arrived last night, brought letters to Oct. 1, but no San Francisco papers. The Los Angelos Vineyard of the 2d inst. is, however, received. It contains an account of a battle at Four Lakes, Oregon, on the 1st of September, between 300 troops, under Col. Wright, and 500 Indians, in which the Indians were completely routed, with the loss of 17 killed and many wounded. The troops sustained no loss whatever.

NOTICES.

Notice.

The second quarterly Conference of Fox River District, will be holden at Shabbona Grove, commencing Nov. 25th, at 7 o'clock P. M. Moses Chandler, Evangelist.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at Pawlings, N. Y., commencing Nov. 10th, and continuing over the following Sunday. We expect those preaching brethren to come that feel directed by the Lord, and can trust the Lord for their pay, as most of the brethren here are poor. We invite all the brethren and sisters that can, and others that feel interested, to come to this meeting. Come saints and sinners. Those that come will be provided for while here.

Stephen, in behalf of the church of God in Pawlings.

Book Notice.

I would say to the Brn., that I have just got printed, in Boston, an improved edition of Death not Life, in paper covers, and bound,—also Glad Tidings and my two tracts on the word Hell, and Foster's noted letter. They can be had of Bro. Grant at the prices now noticed in the Crisis, and by writing me at Buffalo. Brethren in the ministry can have them to sell on commission, and I hope they will send soon and get a supply for the winter. I expect to remain in the East till Jan., and will visit brethren by their sending a request to the Crisis. Jacob Blain.

Boston, Oct. 2, 1858.

Appointments for Danielsonville, Ct.

Bro. S. G. Mathewson, Nov. 14th and 21st. Bro. A. Fox, Nov. 28th and Dec. 5th.

Notice.—The brethren and sisters in Carmel, Me., have established a regular conference at Robinson school-house, near Bro. Geo. L. Robinson's, the third Saturday in each month, and will, if they can, have preaching. Give them a call.

In behalf of the church.

N. F. Nason.

Notice.

There will be a conference in Holden, Me., in the school-house near Bro. Isaac Clewley's, commencing Nov. 12th, and continuing over the Lord's day. Bro. L. Boutell will attend the meeting, and we expect I. Damman will be here also. We desire as many of the servants of God to come as God will. Brethren and sisters come, rally once more from the north, south, east and west, and let us raise up the standard of truth in the name of the Lord. For the Brethren,

Isaac Clewley.

Notice.

If the Lord permit, a conference will be held in West Poland, Maine, commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 11th, at 7 o'clock, and continuing over the Sabbath. Our ministering brethren in Maine are especially invited to attend. We wish all our brethren and sisters to come filled with the Spirit, and labor to see the work of God prosper, and the church built up in the most holy faith.

For the Brethren, Jesse Gay.

Notice.

Whereas, Bro. Champlain has resigned the pastorship of the River Point Advent Church, R. I., we have chosen Bro. E. Bellows as pastor. Bro. Bellows will preach one Sunday in a month—the first. The other three Sundays are left open to the preaching brethren whom we may invite. We hope those we have invited will come soon and see us.

For the Brethren. JOHN P. BABCOCK.

☞ NOTICE.—We would earnestly request those who are indebted to this office for Hymn Books, to remit us the amount due, as we, in all cases, have to pay cash for the same, and cannot afford to be out of the money. Probably some of our brethren have overlooked the fact that they are so long indebted for books. We would, therefore, in all love and earnestness, call their attention to the matter, as the funds of the paper are too contracted to afford lengthened credit.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

I have appointments to preach as follows: At Canterbury Town-house, 3d Sabbath in November; at Sutton, Mill Village, Union Meeting-house, the 4th Sabbath; and at Loudon Ridge the 1st Sabbath in December.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS:

—PUBLISHED BY—

GEO. STORRS, NEW YORK.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid. Any of the following works will be sent, any distance under 3000 miles, postage free, on receipt of the retail price:

BIBLE vs. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: the Corruptions of Theologians Detected, and the Traditions of men Exposed: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. An invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Price, bound, 75 cents; a cheap edition, in paper covers, 35 cents.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by the Editor of the Bible Examiner; prefaced with a Biographical Sketch of the Author. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons, and fully revised. Price in plain binding 50 cents; in gilt 75 cents. A cheap edition, in paper covers, 30.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT, by Rev. H. H. Dobney, Baptist Minister, England. "Part second," 200 pages. This work is very valuable; showing that literal death is the punishment of the wicked. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents.

THE DISCUSSION between Prof. Mattison, of the Methodist E. Church, and the Editor of the Bible Examiner. Question:—"Does the Bible teach that the creature Man—which the Lord God formed of the dust of the ground—has a superadded entity called the soul?" Price 25 cents in paper covers; 38 cents bound.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by the Editor of the Bible Examiner. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; bound 38 cents.

"THE WATCH TOWER: or, MAN IN DEATH; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, mis-named "spiritualism," but which is really animalism. Price 20 cents.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—By Prof. Wilson, England. His general theory is, that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents in paper covers; 75 cents bound.

"MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, The Animal Man and the Spiritual Man. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs." Text.—"That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."—John 3: 6. This is a Sermon never before issued: it is put up in covers, and sold at six cents single; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies for $1: per 100 $3.25; sent at the expense of the purchaser.

☞ We have no other works for sale than those mentioned in the foregoing list. One-third discount will be made, for cash, to such as purchase $2 worth; but, in that case, the works are sent at the expense of the purchaser. By the hundred, a still further discount will be made. Orders may be left with Geo. Young, 138 William Street, New York. All letters, sent by mail, must be addressed—

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4658, New York.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on tracts is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for any of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street Boston, Mass.

Great Controversy

For the Crisis.

Advent Itinerancy.

Bro. Grant:—As this subject has been introduced, and it being one intimately connected with the prosperity of the church, I think it best to keep it before the people until there is a redress of grievances. As has before been stated, this kind of work must be done, or the cause of truth must suffer; and it seems that there is now a wider field for prospective labor than has ever before been presented to the church; and when shall the men and means be found to occupy these new fields? I think by a little systematizing and self-denial, the latter may be in a tolerable degree furnished. Let us consult the arithmetic upon this subject.

Supposing there are five thousand Advent believers in the United States. At the lowest estimate, the average receipt for missionary purposes ought to be one cent per day for each. There are probably many who think they are not able to give anything, and there are others who could give treble that amount and hardly know it. Let us go into a calculation upon self-denial. Supposing you are about to purchase a coat that will cost ten dollars. Buy one for nine; or if it be any other other article of clothing, male or female, economize in the same proportion, and put the money thus saved into the contribution; and carry this principle out in expenditures for houses, furniture and all the departments of life's expenses, and there would soon be an abundance in the Lord's treasury to support his ministers.

Another important element of success in this and all other objects, is system; but where everything is at loose ends, as has been too much the case in matters relating to the church, it is not to be wondered at that ministers have to suffer in consequence thereof. But it cannot be denied that some who have taken upon themselves this office are somewhat to blame in this matter; for by their precept they have encouraged this state of disorganisation in the churches. Some of them have denounced church government, and have pulled down what others have been laboring to build. Some have no doubt supposed that the end was so near that all system and order could be dispensed with; but there is nothing in Scripture to justify any such conclusion.

"Occupy until I come" is just as imperative now, and will be until the sign of the Son of Man is seen. And any body of christians who try to sail over the tempestuous seas of the present time without gospel order, will be inefficient, weak and lame. Yours, &c., D. N. Smith.

For the Crisis.

Brunswick Conference.

Bro. Grant:—The Conference held in Brunswick last week, was a good season indeed. The Lord was with us of a truth. A good number of brethren and sisters came in from the surrounding towns, and enjoyed a feast of love and union worthy the faith we profess. It was manifest from the first that a better state of feeling existed than had been seen for some time. The people of the vicinity came out to see and hear. God poured out his blessing so that they began publicly to confess their former prejudices, and acknowledge that God was with us, and that they believed we preached the truth. Several were reclaimed; one man converted Sunday eve. We continued until Monday evening, when some six or eight came forward for prayers; some found peace with God through Christ, and others are still seeking. Evening meetings are to continue. Lord, bless and save them. There is a deep and lasting impression left on the minds of many of that people, and some fruit of the meeting will be gathered for the coming kingdom of God. Brn. York, Peter Libby, James Libby, Ingham, Wellcome and Hiram Munger were there, and preached the word. Several other ministers were with us also. Bro. Munger came by request of persons in the village to lecture on Spiritualism, but he rendered us much help in our Conference. Yours in the faith,

I. C. Wellcome.

Oct. 20th, 1858.

There is not a spider hanging on the king's wall but hath its errand; there is not a nettle that groweth in the corner of the church-yard but hath its purpose; there is not a single insect fluttering in the breeze but accomplisheth some divine decree; and I will never have it that God created any man, especially any Christian man, to be a blank, and to be a nothing.—Spurgeon.

[From the Expositor, by request.]

From Eld. J. Blain.

Having been very busy, and my health rather poor since I came East in May, I have too long omitted to let brethren know in the West where I was, what doing, and why in the East instead of West, as I have heretofore given encouragement of traveling that way. My reason for this course is, that I learned last fall and this spring that I could not be sustained West, nor sell many books till times changed. Times are hard here, but better than West, and I am obtaining a bare support, but not enough to clear me from past debts, which were increased last year by traveling five months and receiving but $18 in donations, or for labors, while my traveling expenses were $50. I had to live on books previously paid for, and which I am now out of, and lack means to reprint. I have, however, engaged a printer in Boston to publish all my works, except the Review of Beecher, and hope brethren who possibly can, will send me help this fall, or as soon as consistent. As I shall probably not be home till December, they can send to me here, care of G. T. Adams, 167 Hanover Street, or to my son-in-law, J. W. Dean, Chicago, Ill., at the Tribune office.

I am prospered this season in scattering books, and in seeing the good effects of my labors more than ever before; but have not time now to give particulars, but will by and by. Truth is gaining fast in Yankee regions, so I would not be understood as complaining nor repining, though difficulties attend my course. No, I am happy in my toilsome labors, though far from "sweet home," and full in the faith that my Master will provide for my wants. The thought has never entered my mind of leaving the Gospel "to serve tables." Brethren, let our daily song be,—

"We'll stem the storm, it won't be long,
The heav'nly port is nigh;
We'll stem the storm, it can't be long,—
We'll anchor by and by."

I sympathise deeply with brethren West, where they have so few to preach the new and blessed truths they love to hear, and when times permit, I shall gladly travel among you again, if life and health be granted by a kind Providence. I would encourage ministering brethren West to labor on—faint not, the reward will be sure and great to pioneers in God's warfare. J. Blain.

Boston, Mass., Sept. 10, 1858.

For the Crisis.

My Labors.

Several persons have written to me, from different parts of the country, to come and labor with them this fall and winter. To all such I have to say, that at present I am confined to Boston and vicinity, and probably shall be for some time to come. The interest in Boston still continues and increases. The Chapman (large) Hall is crowded to its utmost capacity, so that it is very difficult to seat the people, with a very select congregation, who come to hear. Our public Bible Class, which is held every Sunday at 2 o'clock, P. M., is very large and interesting. While this state of interest continues, our friends must excuse me, and let me remain here.

Edwin Burnham.

P. S.—All communications for me must be directed to Newburyport, Mass.

From Bro. P. Axe.

Bro. Grant:—I write a few lines for the encouragement of the tried ones who are striving to enter in at the strait gate. Be of good cheer. I praise the Lord for the light I have received in reading the Crisis, and books and tracts on the doctrine of life through Christ, and the blessed hope of the soon coming Jesus. I was a believer in sin's eternity and man's immortality, being taught thus from my youth; but reading the Scriptures, and accepting their literal import, makes all things plain.

I receive much opposition, but by the grace of God I am resolved to do what I can in spreading the truth of the gospel. Some say it matters not what we believe, if we are sincere. I learn we are to be sanctified by believing the truth. May we all cultivate a spirit of love, and have a home in the everlasting kingdom that will soon be set up. Peter Axe.

☞ Sympathy is much more catching than intelligence. Anybody can feel, but everybody cannot understand. Hence pity for a person brought into distress by his own acts, often outweighs all the conviction produced by a knowledge of his crimes.

Obituary Notices.

Found dead in his bed, in Northfield, Mass., on the morning of the 15th of September, Asa S. Horton, aged 44 years.

The deceased was in good health, when he retired the evening before. It was found upon examination to be the rupture of a blood vessel. Thus has death entered this family and taken from them a dearly beloved brother and son. The subject of this notice was not a professor, but had ever manifested a kind spirit towards God's children. Although he did not communicate his feelings to any one before death, still we cannot but hope to see him in the resurrection morning clad in immortality.

How long, O Death, thou tyrant, shalt thou reign over the earth? Thank God, his children are soon to shout victory over the grave. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

Domestic News.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Dates to the 16th of September. A new treaty has been made with France. The main points yielded to France are, that the French language is to be placed on a level with the English; the duty on liquors to be reduced from $5 to $3 per gallon; French vessels are to be placed on the same footing as Hawaiian; the French Consul to be allowed to exercise judicial functions belonging of right to the Hawaiian Courts.

Bolivia continues in a disturbed state. An attempt was made at La Paz to assassinate the President. He escaped, but Gen. Prudencio and another gentleman who stood beside him, were shot dead. The assassins had previously proclaimed Gen. Belzu, and attacked the barracks. Tranquility was finally restored, through the promptness and firmness of President Linares.

Peru again threatens war against Ecuador, and has sent two war vessels to that country, with a commission to demand satisfaction for recent insults to their ministers by that Republic.

Ex-President Echinique is said to be in Bolivia, occupied in fermenting revolution against Castilla's government.

FROM MEXICO.

The Times Mexico correspondent states that on the 14th September the Mexican government made discovery of a pretended plot to assassinate the President, his ministry and many prominent citizens, and to give the city up to plunder. The foreigners were openly accused of having concocted this scheme, and government was taking every means to exasperate the people against them. Our minister, Mr. Forsyth, was threatened with an attack on his house, the object being the seizure of foreigners harbored there.

Large numbers of Indians had made their appearance on the Mohave, causing great alarm at San Bernardino. They had attacked and wounded several Americans, and stolen a number of cattle.

St. Louis, Oct. 26.—A dispatch from Fort Independence says that the Santa Fe mail, with dates of the 4th inst., arrived on the 23d. The report of the second battle with the Navajo Indians had been confirmed. Mr. Yost, their agent, formally suspended all relations with them, and he states their wealth consists in 250,000 sheep and 60,000 horses, which, if destroyed, will drive them to desperation, and that a second Florida war may be expected.

NEWS BY THE OVERLAND CALIFORNIA MAIL—INDIAN FIGHT IN OREGON.

St. Louis, Oct. 27.—The overland mail, which arrived last night, brought letters to Oct. 1, but no San Francisco papers. The Los Angelos Vineyard of the 2d inst. is, however, received. It contains an account of a battle at Four Lakes, Oregon, on the 1st of September, between 300 troops, under Col. Wright, and 500 Indians, in which the Indians were completely routed, with the loss of 17 killed and many wounded. The troops sustained no loss whatever.

NOTICES.

Notice.

The second quarterly Conference of Fox River District, will be holden at Shabbona Grove, commencing Nov. 25th, at 7 o'clock P. M. Moses Chandler, Evangelist.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at Pawlings, N. Y., commencing Nov. 10th, and continuing over the following Sunday. We expect those preaching brethren to come that feel directed by the Lord, and can trust the Lord for their pay, as most of the brethren here are poor. We invite all the brethren and sisters that can, and others that feel interested, to come to this meeting. Come saints and sinners. Those that come will be provided for while here.

Stephen, in behalf of the church of God in Pawlings.

Book Notice.

I would say to the Brn., that I have just got printed, in Boston, an improved edition of Death not Life, in paper covers, and bound,—also Glad Tidings and my two tracts on the word Hell, and Foster's noted letter. They can be had of Bro. Grant at the prices now noticed in the Crisis, and by writing me at Buffalo. Brethren in the ministry can have them to sell on commission, and I hope they will send soon and get a supply for the winter. I expect to remain in the East till Jan., and will visit brethren by their sending a request to the Crisis. Jacob Blain.

Boston, Oct. 2, 1858.

Appointments for Danielsonville, Ct.

Bro. S. G. Mathewson, Nov. 14th and 21st.
Bro. A. Fox, Nov. 28th and Dec. 5th.

Notice.—The brethren and sisters in Carmel, Me., have established a regular conference at Robinson school-house, near Bro. Geo. L. Robinson's, the third Saturday in each month, and will, if they can, have preaching. Give them a call.

In behalf of the church. N. F. Nason.

Notice.

There will be a conference in Holden, Me., in the school house near Bro. Isaac Clewley's, commencing Nov. 12th, and continuing over the Lord's day. Bro. L. Boutell will attend the meeting, and we expect I. Damman will be here also. We desire as many of the servants of God to come as God will. Brethren and sisters come, rally once more from the north, south, east and west, and let us raise up the standard of truth in the name of the Lord. For the Brethren,

Isaac Clewley.

Notice.

If the Lord permit, a conference will be held in West Poland, Maine, commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 11th, at 7 o'clock, and continuing over the Sabbath. Our ministering brethren in Maine are especially invited to attend. We wish all our brethren and sisters to come filled with the Spirit, and labor to see the work of God prosper, and the church built up in the most holy faith.

For the Brethren, Jesse Gay.

Notice.

Whereas, Bro. Champlain has resigned the pastorship of the River Point Advent Church, R. I., we have chosen Bro. E. Bellows as pastor. Bro. Bellows will preach one Sunday in a month—the first. The other three Sundays are left open to the preaching brethren whom we may invite. We hope those we have invited will come soon and see us.

For the Brethren. JOHN P. BABCOCK.

☞ NOTICE.—We would earnestly request those who are indebted to this office for Hymn Books, to remit us the amount due, as we, in all cases, have to pay cash for the same, and cannot afford to be out of the money. Probably some of our brethren have overlooked the fact that they are so long indebted for books. We would, therefore, in all love and earnestness, call their attention to the matter, as the funds of the paper are too contracted to afford lengthened credit.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

I have appointments to preach as follows: At Canterbury Town-house, 3d Sabbath in November; at Sutton, Mill Village, Union Meeting-house, the 4th Sabbath; and at Loudon Ridge the 1st Sabbath in December.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS:

—PUBLISHED BY—

GEO. STORRS, NEW YORK.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid. Any of the following works will be sent, any distance under 3000 miles, postage free, on receipt of the retail price:

BIBLE vs. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: the Corruptions of Theologians Detected, and the Traditions of men Exposed: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. An invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Price, bound, 75 cents; a cheap edition, in paper covers, 35 cents.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by the Editor of the Bible Examiner; prefaced with a Biographical Sketch of the Author. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons, and fully revised. Price in plain binding 50 cens; in gilt 75 cents. A cheap edition, in paper covers, 30.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT, by Rev. H. H. Dobney, Baptist Minister, England. "Part second." 200 pages. This work is very valuable; showing that literal death is the punishment of the wicked. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents.

THE DISCUSSION between Prof. Mattison, of the Methodist E. Church, and the Editor of the Bible Examiner. Question:—"Does the Bible teach that the creature Man—which the Lord God formed of the dust of the ground—has a superadded entity called the soul?" Price 25 cents in paper covers; 38 cents bound.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by the Editor of the Bible Examiner. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; bound 38 cents.

"THE WATCH TOWER: or, MAN IN DEATH; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, mis-named "spiritualism," but which is really animalism. Price 20 cents.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—By Prof. Wilson, England. His general theory is, that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents in paper covers; 75 cents bound.

"MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, The Animal Man and the Spiritual Man. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs." Text.—"That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."—John 3: 6. This is a Sermon never before issued: it is put up in covers, and sold at six cents single: 50 cents per dozen: 25 copies for $1: per 100 $3.25; sent at the expense of the purchaser.

☞ We have no other works for sale than those mentioned in the foregoing list. One-third discount will be made, for cash, to such as purchase $2 worth; but, in that case, the works are sent at the expense of the purchaser. By the hundred, a still further discount will be made. Orders may be left with Geo. Young, 138 William Street, New York. All letters, sent by mail, must be addressed—GEORGE STORRS, Box 4658, New York.

Law requires all transient publications shall be pre-paid; hence, persons ordering books or tracts must send enough to pre-pay postage. The postage on tracts is only one half cent per ounce, if sent in packages of eight ounces or more; books and pamphlets, one cent per ounce.

Orders for any of the following works will be promptly attended to at the Office of the Crisis, 167 Hanover street Boston Mass.

Selected for the Crisis.

"EARTH TO EARTH,—DUST TO DUST!"

"Earth to earth, and dust to dust!"
Here the evil and the just,
Here the youthful and the old,
Here the fearful and the bold,
Here the matron and the maid,
In one silent bed are laid;
Here the vassal and the king
Side by side lie withering;
Here the sword and sceptre rust,—
"Earth to earth, and dust to dust!"

Age on age shall roll along
O'er this pale and mighty throng;
Those that wept them, those that weep,
All shall with these sleepers sleep.
Brothers, sisters of the worm—
Summer's sun, or Winter's storm,
Song of peace, or battle's roar,
Ne'er shall break their slumbers more;
Death shall keep his sullen trust,—
"Earth to earth, and dust to dust!"

But a day is coming fast,
Earth, thy mightiest and thy last;
It shall come in fear and wonder,
Heralded by trump and thunder;
It shall come in strife and toil,
It shall come in blood and spoil,
It shall come in empires' groans,
Burning temples, trampled thrones;
Then, Ambition, rue thy lust!—
"Earth to earth, and dust to dust!"

Then shall come the Judgment sign,
In the east the King shall shine;
Flashing from Heaven's golden gate,
Thousands, thousands round his state,
Spirits with the crown and plume;
Tremble then, thou sullen tomb!
Heaven shall open on our sight,
Earth be turned to living light,
Kingdoms of the ransomed just,—
"Earth to earth, and dust to dust!"

Then thy mount, Jerusalem,
Shall be gorgeous as a gem;
Then shall in the desert rise
Fruits of more than Paradise;
Earth by angel feet be trod,
One great garden of our God!
Till are dried the martyr's tears
Through a thousand glorious years.
Now in hope of him we trust,—
"Earth to earth, and dust to dust!"

REV. GEO. CROLEY.

Original Articles.

For the Crisis.

We must be Holy.

Yes, we must be holy. God is holy, and therefore we must be holy. Christ is holy, and therefore we must be holy. Angels are holy, and therefore we must holy. The inhabitants of the kingdom of heaven will all be holy, and therefore we must be holy to dwell with them. The Spirit of the kingdom of God will be a holy Spirit, and therefore we must be holy to enjoy that Spirit. The employment of the kingdom of heaven will be holy, and therefore we must be holy to be employed there. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord; and as we desire to see the Lord, that is, continue to see him, in the sense of dwelling with him, we must be holy. Happiness is the absolute fruit of holiness, and as we would be happy here and hereafter, we must be holy. We are commanded to do good in the world, and we cannot do good extensively in an unholy condition of mind; therefore we should be holy. Holiness gives God an opportunity to greatly bless us, and therefore we should be holy. Holiness pleases God, and therefore we should be holy. Holiness honors Christ, and therefore we should be holy. Holiness magnifies the Gospel of God's grace, and therefore we should be holy.

Holiness is consistent with the solemn and high profession that we have made before God, angels, men, and devils, and therefore we should be holy. Holiness makes us, as christians, lovely one to another, and therefore we should be holy. We have the means in our possession of becoming holy, and therefore we should be holy. God commands us to be holy,—"Be ye holy, for I am holy,"—and therefore we should be holy. The Devil hates holiness, and therefore we should be holy. Sin has brought in all the misery that exists into our world, and therefore we should avoid sin by being holy. Sin will condemn millions of our fellow men to eternal death, and therefore we should hate sin, and love holiness. Sin dishonors God, and therefore we should turn from sin to holiness. Sin [illegible] the blessed Redeemer on the cross [illegible] and drew out his hearts' life-blood, and therefore we should hate sin with all our soul [illegible] with all our might.

Would you, my friend, triumph over all [illegible] be holy. Would you [illegible] be holy. Would you [illegible] welcome the Son of God coming in the clouds of heaven? be holy. Would you [illegible] beings bold as a lion, even when they reproach and deride you? be holy. Would you live without the fear of coming evil? be holy. Would you enjoy the blessings of the present life? be holy. Would you be happy in your family? be holy. Would you sit with pleasure in the house of God, and hear the plainest and most searching preaching with pleasure? be holy. WOULD YOU BE ALL THAT GOD REQUIRES YOU TO BE? BE HOLY!

For the Crisis.

Indian Summer.

How bright and beauteous Sol pours forth his cheering rays on nature's blanched and sickly visage, as if he were attempting to restore her wan and consumptive appearance. And indeed his efforts are not entirely fruitless. Look! Those large shrubs, that have so keenly felt the chilling blight of the hoar-frost, have kindly thrown out a maternal arm to protect the tiny beauty just attempting to unfold its bright petals, unconscious of its untimely visit.

And can it be that nature is indeed convalescent? Will these halcyon days lure us into hope's quiet harbor respecting her recovery? Nay, verily. The law of nature's God as peremptorily forbids it as the voice of prophecy interdicted Napoleon in his attempts to establish a fifth universal monarchy on this "groaning creation." Dan. 2. 44.

Brumal must as assuredly pay us his visit ere Flora can make her appearance, as that Christ with his saints will constitute the next universal kingdom. Dan. 7: 19; 18: 27. The lone autumnal winds declare it, as they sigh gently over nature's cadaverous countenance, thus caused by autumn's annual epidemic. The leaves, like so many invalids prostrated upon their bed of languishing, until they shall mingle with their mother earth, proclaim the same. Euroclydon's harsh hand occasionally seizes and shakes them with a rigor quite in keeping with his stern and merciless nature. And, then, like some lenient friend, the soft zephyr gently raises them as if to restore them to their former elevated and healthy residence. But alas! The stern potency of the first, and the gentle friendship of the second are alike inefficient to restore them from their bed of death. Their unusual beauty is only the brilliancy of the hectic, hence they must as inevitably mingle with their mother earth, as the victim of consumed lungs whose hopes are revived each alternate day! Yes, vegetation is as entirely dependent for life on Him who in Nain raised the widow's son, as the countless millions that now lie deposited in death's charnel house. But these sunny days do exceedingly cheer all nature both animate and inanimate! Who does not involuntarily exclaim, beautiful! while gazing upward at "the azure cope above our head" slightly obscured by the gauzy curtain of smoke, while the frail silvery gossamer floats as independantly as the sail of the noble barge? Who would think Sol was far advanced on his way, to pay his annual hyemal visit to the goat-like Capricorn; and that in some six or eight weeks he will greet this his northernmost friend? But thus it is. Though he for many successive days thus profusely shed upon us his genial rays, we do sufficiently discern "the face of the sky" to know every diurnal revolution speeds him on his frozen journey. This is conceded by all; even the American savage whose habits have christened this portion of the year, now feels admonished by the Great Spirit to make preparations to receive the icy king; hence this is the time he arrays himself in all the paraphernalia for hunting and goes forth, joyous that the Great Spirit thus delays his ice-bound Royalty until poor Indian can store his mud-plastered wigwam with savory venison. Though as ignorant of letters as the wild-beasts that fall by his skillfully directed arrow, he sufficiently understands "the face of the sky" to know these few sunny days do not indicate a revival of nature, but rather "cruel winter."

And shall those who have received written oracles from God himself, which oracles positively assert we are nearing the winter of judgment, conclude, because, forsooth, the sun of righteousness has shone a few days with unwonted brilliancy, that a spiritual summer is dawning upon us, instead of the judgment, and soon will appear in perfect loveliness? If we carefully peruse these sacred oracles, we shall find this is only an Indian Summer. Are not the rise and fall of earthly monarchies as predicted by the prophets, in the past, as well as [illegible] promised celestial signs, with the distress of nations, &c.? What next shall we look for in the Master's catalogue of signs? Ans. "The sign of the Son of man." Then let us not forget to warn the world of the approaching judgment because the Sun of Righteousness has brightly shed his cheering rays on its guilty inhabitants a few short days!

May not the number of those who have really left all for Jesus be compared to the few green things of summer that now remain? And the professed church of Christ to the common foliage whose variegated beauty is enchanting, but whose real life is sapped by pride and rejection of the truth? But thank God that He has some evergreens that are planted so near "the river of life" they flourish equally in December as in May. As they daily draw living nourishment from the great fountain head, they never change their color, but are EVERGREEN.

Lecture

ON THE PRESENT POSITION AND FUTURE PROSPECTS OF THE JEWS.

BY RIDLEY HERSCHELL, a Converted Israelite. Delivered in Edinburg, April 19, 1858.

The lecturer, who has long been connected with the society for the conversion of the Jews, commenced with a few general observations on the feelings of repugnance with which the Jew is received. "Converted, or unconverted," observed the lecturer, "there exists among the gentiles not only a feeling of prejudice, but a sort of dislike towards them; and I will give the reason; it is because the Gentiles are their debtors. We never like creditors, and so the Gentiles illustrate a general feeling in entertaining an antipathy towards the Jews, whose debtors they really are. The lecturer alluded to what he designated a marvellous mistake. It was a general mistake to reason the Jews don't believe, ergo the Gentiles do, and a great deal was said about the rejection of the Jews, and the stepping of the Gentiles into their place; but if they would only carefully consider one or two facts, they would discover that there was a greater number of believing Jews, in proportion to the great mass of the Gentile nations. He put the case thus:

Every third person in the world is a Chinese idolator; every fifth, a Hindoo; every seventh, a Mahomedan; every eighth, an idolator, of some other description; and every ninth, a Romish idolator; so that out of the whole population of Gentiles, there was only one-eighth per cent belonging to the Protestant religion, and of that small portion, how few were real believers! Numerically speaking, therefore, he maintained that there was a larger proportion of Jewish believers in the world, than of Gentiles. He went on to speak of the extraordinary increase of Jewish converts that has taken place during the last half-century, remarking that the preaching of the gospel as a whole had produced more effect among them than among the Gentiles, and that if the Gentiles had to make the same sacrifices in professing faith in Christ that the Jews had, there would be a fearful thinning of the ranks indeed. Missions in the east, as a whole, had been most difficult and unsuccessful, chiefly because the Jews were there surrounded with idolatry and superstition bearing the name of Christianity. The Christian idolatry in Jerusalem was the greatest abomination Jerusalem had ever witnessed, and an idolatry far outstripping any the Jews had ever been guilty of. He referred to the rites and ceremonies practised by the Greeks and Latins, and observed that the public enactment of such lies in Jerusalem, by the combined priestcraft resident there, made the Jewish heart shudder, and drew him with tenfold vehemence to the place of wailing, there to weep scalding tears over his departed glory. He held his Bible in his hand, and read of the once prosperous condition of his nation. He looked upon the ruins before him, and read of the time when the wastes should be builded, and then turning his eyes upon the abominations of the priests, he associated the name of Christ with the superstition, and exclaimed, "This my Messiah! this the religion I am to embrace? No, no, never, never!" For these reasons it was impossible to get the Jews to listen to anything about Christ.

The lecturer then alluded to a discovery that was made on the occasion of his visit to Palestine, whither he had been deputed to make inquiries as to the feasibility of establishing a Jewish farm settlement. Prior to that time, Arabia Felix had never been visited, and one of his colleagues, a Mr. Sterne, determined to do so without delay. He fitted out an expedition, and set out on his journey, and after enduring incredible hardships and privations, entered the territory. Here, he discovered, to his great surprise, a community of about 200,000 Jews, living among Mahomedan tribes in a state of cruel bondage. They were in great poverty, and were constantly exposed to the depredations of the ruthless tribes by whom they were surrounded. Their knowledge was restricted to the Mosaic laws and ordinances. They had never heard of Christianity; and when the New Testament was read to them, they were utterly amazed, and eagerly purchased numbers of Testaments. Large numbers of them became convinced of the Messiahship of Jesus, by the simple reading of the book, and exclaimed, "Ah! we can see the reason now, why we are suffering so much! Our fathers rejected the Messiah!" and notwithstanding their extreme poverty, they leagued together, and despatched an expedition to Aden, whence they procured £80 worth of Testaments.

They were constantly oppressed, and manifested the greatest desire to emigrate; and he was happy to say that, though the land was desolate, and trodden down by strangers, the stranger was wasting away. The prediction that "the land shall be without inhabitant," had been almost literally fulfilled; and the land was only awaiting the return of its original possessors. All along the coasts of the ancient land of Philistia, there was hardly any inhabitants, and the same was true of the ancient region of Syria. From Dan even unto Beersheba, and from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates, the whole land was nearly vacant. It was crying out to its children, "Come, come, how long will you let us lie desolate?"

The mountains of Judah, with their terraces neglected and forsaken, were saying, Will you not come and plant vineyards upon us again? and the stones were looking out of the ground as if they cried, "Are we forever to be desolate? Is there no promise that the waste cities shall be builded, and the desolation of many generations?"

Such was the state of the country, and what were they to think of it? "The same word that had said, Christ was to be a light to lighten the Gentiles," had also said, "he would be the glory of Israel;" and why won't they believe that? He was happy to say that a marvellous change had taken place in the history of that country within the last few years; and he thanked God, and took courage for the prospects that were opening up as a consequence of the late Russian war. A firman had been issued, by the Turkish government, conferring upon foreigners the right of possessing lands in any part of Turkey, ten years free of rent, and six years free of taxation. Availing themselves of this firman, the lecturer and others of his nation had purchased a plot of ground near Jaffa, in Palestine, covering an area of forty acres, and planted a Jewish settlement, for the purpose of affording employment to the Jews in their own country.

This settlement has been in operation for about a year, and was prosperous; but, as his hearers would have seen from the papers, a dark chapter had already clouded its brief history. About three months ago, some marauding Bedouins broke in upon the settlement, and committed an outrage upon one of the resident families. At the time of its occurrence, he was in London, and when he heard of it, he had applied for redress at the proper authorities; and that application had providentially opened up prospects, with reference to the future of Israel and their land, such as had never before existed. He obtained an immediate interview with the Turkish Ambassador, and complained of the grievous breach of the law which had been committed. The Ambassador assured him, that the men would be brought to punishment; but, he replied that it was of no use to talk of punishment in a land where there was neither law, authority, nor order. Mr. Herschell pointed out that in the present dangerous condition of things in Palestine, there was no power to administer punishment, that the country was ruled by the wild Arab tribes with which it was infested, and that some vigorous remedy was required. He suggested one to his Highness. He recommended that the Sultan should proclaim liberty to all Jews throughout the world to return to their land, with power to possess and cultivate the soil, also that he should offer them protection, and allow them to establish their own forms of municipal administration, empowering them to protect themselves. The Sultan would then have a neutral power, preserving peace and order in a land otherwise the prey of social anarchy and confusion. The country would soon become peopled with a hardy and enterprising race, in whose hands it would become prosperous and flourishing.

The Ambassador, the lecturer proceeded to say, expressed himself quite captivated with the prospect. Palestine had always been a source of trouble and annoyance to the Porte; and every scheme for its proper management had hitherto failed; but the one Mr. Herschell had placed before him, he pronounced the best he had yet heard. He declared his readiness to act upon it; and after a series of interviews between the lecturer and the Ambassador, in which the matter was discussed in all its bearings, a document was drawn up embodying the result of their deliberations, and officially forwarded to the Turkish government. It was now under its consideration, and the lecturer had not the least doubt that it would be acted upon, as it was identical in principle to the firman recently issued. Who could tell what the results would be? The lecturer was listened to with profound attention throughout.—Herald of the Kingdom.

THE TONGUES OF POVERTY.—When Leitch Ritchie was traveling in Ireland, he passed a man who was a painful spectacle of pallor, squalor and raggedness. His heart smote him, and he turned back:

"If you are in want," said Ritchie, with some degree of peevishness, "why don't you beg?"

"Sure it's begging I am, yer honor."

"You didn't say a word."

"Ov coorse not, yer honor; but see how the skin is speakin' through the holes of me trousers, and the bones crying out through me skin! Look at me sunken cheeks, and the famine that's staring in me eyes. Man alive! isn't it begging I am with a hundred tongues?"

Peace Like a River.

"Away among the Alleghanies there is a spring so small that a single ox in a summer day could drain it dry. It steals its unobtrusive way among the hills till it spreads out in the beautiful Ohio. Thence it stretches away a thousand miles, leaving on its banks, cities, villages, and cultivated farms, and bearing on its bosom more than half a thousand steamboats." This I have culled somewhere, I know not where, nor when. Yet with the bubbling fountain in my eye, and roaring waterfall in my ear, I say, "Beautiful representation of a christian's peace. Peace as a river." Like a river in its commencement,—trickling from some fissure in the heart, singing its own song as it dropped from leaf to leaf, from ledge to ledge—now gathering itself up in a little pool, saying to its joyous waters "here we rest"—then rushing on again to fulfil its purpose, and gain its parent sea.

Like a river in its progress,—ever widening and deepening from the "ankles" to the "knees," from the knees to the loins, from the loins to "waters to swim in, a river that cannot be passed over"—receiving new tributaries on the right and left, sweeping away as it rolls on its healthful stream the dead and dying remains of past affections and former lusts, and bearing on its bosom a thousand newly launched hopes.

Like a river in its influence—holy, healthy, generating—causing a wide expanse of "living green" to spread out on either side—making even the desert of the soul "rejoice and blossom as the rose."

Like a river in its changes—when the warm sun of righteousness pours his effulgent rays on a heart that has experienced the rigors of a spiritual winter, and melts the cold snows and breaks the ice-bound streams—or when the showers of grace fall on the heart's hill-top, then a blessed fullness pervaded all its course—many a "crevasse" through which it pours its sanctifying streams.

Like a river in its termination—rolling into, and mingling with, the shoreless, blessed sea of perfect peace, where undulating waves never roll in strife or break in death. Long ere the great sea is reached, the river of peace meets the great "tidal wave" as it rolls itself inland as if to hasten the hour of union, and give the redeemed soul a blessed sense—a foretaste of eternal felicity and future joy. "There the glorious land will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams, wherein shall go no galley with sails, neither shall gallant ship pass through."—Chr. Era.

The Christian's View of the World.

The soul that bears about with it the living apprehension of its being made for an everlasting state, bows not itself to be engrossed with the petty concerns, or even the grander schemes of men. It ever hath before it the image of this world vanishing and passing away, and of the other, with its everlasting affairs, even now filling up the stage. It can represent to itself the vision of the world dissolving, its thrones tumbling, its monarchies and kingdoms breaking up, and its crowns and sceptres lying as neglected things. It hath a telescope through which it can behold the glorious appearance of the final Judge—the solemn state of his majestic person—the splendid pomp of his numerous attendants—the throng of angels bowing before him—the swift flight of his royal guards sent forth to the four winds to gather the elect, and covering the face of heaven with their wings—the universal silent attention of all to the voice of that trumpet that shakes the earth, and echoes from every part of the encircling heavens—the myriads of the saints arising, putting on their glory, taking wing and rising to mingle with the heavenly host—the judgment seat—the books opened, the frightful, amazed look of the guilty—the equal administration of God's justice—the adjudication of all to their endless states—the heavens rolled together as a scroll, and the earth and all that is therein, burned up. These, all these are before such a soul as present realities. And now what spirit can remain for the trivial affairs of a vanishing world? How indifferent a thing is it with him whether he is high or low in a state which is so soon coming to such an end! How securely does he rest on that infinite wisdom that governs the world! How calm is he in the midst of external troubles! How placid, whether in life or death! In all circumstances he lives by faith.

A YOUTHFUL MIND.—A straw will make an impression on the virgin snow. Let it remain a short time and a horse's hoof can hardly penetrate it. So it is with the youthful mind. A trifling word may make an impression upon it, but after a few years the most powerful appeals may cease to influence it. Think of this, ye who have the training of the infant mind, and leave such an impression thereon as will be safe for it to carry amid the follies and temptation of the world.

LIVING WATER.

"Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again, but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst."

Above the fountain, where the sparkling waters
Of pleasure frolic in the sunshine gay,
Luring by crowds, the youthful sons and daughters
Of earth from wisdom's pleasant, peaceful way,
Discern ye not, O! thoughtless, blooming train,
These words, "Who drinketh here shall thirst again?"

Far up among the heights of vain ambition,
Rises a spring that feeds the thirst for fame;
And he who drinks most deeply, proves most truly,
Whoever drinketh there shall thirst again.
Yet still the pilgrims to that mocking shrine,
Keep marching on in an unbroken line.

And hearts that throb not at the call of pleasure,
And answer not to proud ambition's call,
Beat strongly with the love of golden treasure,
And bind the fetters which their souls enthrall.
Bearing with fortitude the bitter pain
Of those whose thirst is equal to their gain.

Fast by the throne of God there flows a river,
Whose healing streams have reached this blighted shore;
And listen! all our thirsting souls, whoever
Drinks of this blessed water thirsts no more.
New life it giveth, an immortal breath,
That yields not to the kingly power of death.

Letters Illustrative of Christian Experience.—No. 1.

My Dear Sister:—I see no necessity of your being so much troubled, and yielding so often to doubts respecting your conversion, because you never experienced those awful convictions for sin, and that strongly marked change of heart, that is frequently, perhaps commonly, attendant upon the transition state. God gives us just as vivid a perception of our condition as sinners, as is needful in order to lead us to Christ for pardon. Some are so hardened in sin, and have so little inclination to live a life of piety, that he awakens a deep and realizing sense of inward depravity, and alarms the slumbering conscience to view the awful danger of persisting in a state of alienation from God.

When the will is stern and unyielding, the Holy Spirit strives more forcibly to bring it in subjection; hence more pungent conviction, producing greater distress of mind, is necessary. That individual who has been brought up religiously, and has a mind susceptible to religious impressions, and very conscientious, readily yielding to the monitions of the Spirit, will not experience those strong convictions for sin that are attendant upon the individual previously described. Such, at least, is the result of my own observation and experience.

There are those who seem to covet the remarkable conversion of St. Paul. They would fain behold some visible manifestation of the divine presence, by which they might like him be overcome. But such is not the ordinary method by which God works. Paul was an unbeliever in the divinity of Jesus Christ, and not only an unbeliever but an opposer, and was even then on his way to apprehend the disciples of Jesus, and bring them bound unto Jerusalem. To him, the Lord revealed himself personally, that he might be convinced that he was indeed the crucified and risen Son of God. His awakening was remarkable, but we have no account that his justification was any more striking than that of others.

Very simple is the relation of the conversion of the Ethiopian, who journeyed to Jerusalem to worship, probably as a proselyte. He was returning, and as he rode along in his chariot, he read Esaias the prophet. By an inward impression of the Spirit, Philip the evangelist was led to address the question to him, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" He answered, "How can I, except some man should guide me?" He then invited Philip to sit with him, who readily complied, and then began to explain to him the prophecy respecting the Messiah, and to show how evidently it was fulfilled in Christ, who had been crucified. The eunuch believed the testimony, and immediately, as a true convert should, desired to be baptized. Philip did not wait six months first, to see how he would hold out, but, no doubt thinking he could better endure by obedience to the command of Christ, he unhesitatingly went down into the water with him, and baptized him, and the eunuch went on his way rejoicing.

Now, my sister, I doubt not but that this simple and short experience was just as genuine, and as fully acceptable with God, as that of St. Paul. My own experience is much in harmony with yours. I was religiously educated. When but a mere child, my dear mother took me with her alone, and commended me to God in prayer. I was early taught the way of life. I was very strict, so far as respects outward sins, and was accustomed to pray much, from my childhood up to the time when I made a public profession of faith in Christ. When in my seventeenth year, I openly renounced the world, and presented myself at the altar for prayer, sincerely seeking to be justified through faith in Jesus. I wept over my fallen condition, and panted for salvation; but I experienced no deep distress of mind. I could eat and sleep, as formerly, and was in no terror on account of future punishment. I did not have a hard struggle to submit myself to God's will; I was all ready to yield, when, as the result of my decision to become a christian, I went forward for prayers. Had I understood then just how to exercise saving faith in Christ, I might have been saved at once. As it was, for a day or two I halted at that point; but when a brother said, "go to Jesus as you are; he has said, 'Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest;' and 'He that cometh to me I will in no no wise cast out;' now when you come, believe that he does receive you, and does give you rest, because he says he will;" I at once understood the way. I came thus to Jesus, when one was offering prayer at the commencement of the meeting, and at once I entered into peace. "Rest" came, but O, how gently! I could hardly realize the transition, it was so unmarked. Yet there was a change, and that I knew. The burden was gone, and all was quiet. I was impressed to speak of it, and this was my first cross in the narrow path. I arose timidly, and said that I believed the Lord had blessed me in some degree. The light shone more brightly then. Peace deepened a little more. Again I confessed the increasing evidence, and clearer dawned the morning, leading on toward the rising Sun.

No doubt many, who have thus attained the justifying grace, refuse to cherish it, because it is not more full and clear. Some lose it, by withholding the needful confession. Step by step the soul advances in the divine life, even unto the final consummation, when the entire being becomes perfected in glory.

Our great anxiety ought not so much to be respecting the precise time when we "passed from death unto life," as to know that we are now accepted and saved. We cannot rely on past experience; that is, we may not depend on it as evidence of present justification; but the important question is, Am I now right with God? Seek, my beloved sister, to understand present duty, leaving past and future results with God, and while you yield your will in perfect submission to Christ, it is your blessed privilege to reckon yourself the Lord's, whether you are in the vale or on the mountain's top. And if you belong to Christ, all that he has is thine. So says the sure word. Claim, then, the rich and abundant communications of his grace, that you may be prepared to instruct the ignorant, and witness well for God.

Yours in christian love,
Mary D. Wellcome.

The Believer "Rooted and Grounded in Love."

We need to be planted and take deep root in the soil of heavenly love. As a native tree taken from a hard, barren, uncultivated soil, and transferred into one prepared by agricultural skill, becomes flourishing and fruitful, so the believer, transplanted from nature into grace, under the care of the great Husbandman, flourisheth, and "bringeth forth much fruit."

The "fruit of the Spirit" may be found in the unregenerate heart and life, but when it is, it is like the insignificant, imperfect and dwarfish fruit of a native, uncultivated tree, which is of but little value, if any. Such persons, to become "trees of righteousness, and bring forth fruit unto perfection, need to be transplanted from nature's soil into the garden of the Lord;—set out in his orchard, and under the care of the true "Husbandman," they will "bring forth much fruit," hanging in golden clusters and beauteous perfection to bless mankind. A man may be amiable and good in natural disposition, but he must become a christian to truly benefit mankind and glorify God.

The believer needs to send deeper and still deeper down into the soil of eternal love his roots of faith and hope, so that the storms and tempests of adversity, the whirlwinds and hurricanes of error, fanaticism and persecution, may not uproot him. The more exposed the christian believer is to them, the more should this be the case. The tree in the open field, unprotected by forests, exposed to tempests and winds, sends deeper and still deeper down its roots, and spreads them abroad, taking hold here and there of the rocks, and thus clenching the soil in all directions, it withstands the tempests to which it is exposed. So should the believer send deep down his roots into heavenly love, and entwine them around the "Rock of Ages," and then will he resist the storms of adversity, and stand when they are passed, enduring unto the end. The whirlwinds of error and persecution may sweep over the land and church, and thousands be prostrated before them, yet he stands erect in faith and hope in his God. Some trees are twisted and broken by the fury of the hurricane, though sound to the heart, while the roots seem to be scarcely disturbed. So some believers will be broken and smitten down under trial, discipline and persecution, and go down to an early death and a martyr's grave, yet their roots still abide in love, and cling with the power of life to the Rock of their Salvation.

There is a growth of strength while the believer is "rooted and grounded in love." The twig may be uprooted by a child's hand, but the full grown tree cannot be torn up by a man's strong arm.

Some believers have the enjoyment of but few religious privileges, and yet they flourish; they are like trees that grow and flourish on barren soil, or on the rock, while they send down here and there strong roots into the earth, which are fed by some secret springs, or the rains of heaven:—so these grow and flourish under divine grace in the most unfavorable circumstances.

Lorenzo Dow.—On one occasion he took the liberty, while preaching, to denounce a rich man in the community, recently deceased. The result was an arrest, a trial for slander, and an imprisonment in the county jail. After Lorenzo got out of "limbo," he announced that, in spite of his (in his opinion) unjust punishment, he should preach, at a given time, a sermon about "another rich man." The populace was greatly excited, and a crowded house greeted his appearance. With great solemnity he opened the Bible and read—"And there was another rich man who died and went to——;" then stopped short, and seemed to be suddenly impressed. He continued, "Brethren, I shall not mention the place which this man went to, for fear he has relatives in the congregation, who will sue me for defamation of character." The effect was irresistible.

For the Crisis.

My Religious Belief.—No. 3.

15. I believe "the heaven must contain the glorious Son of God, until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." At the second advent of Christ the glorious times of restitution will commence, and continue until the new creation is completed. "O hail, happy day!

There is much darkness in the churches relative to the character of the "age to come." It is true that many who make the prophecies their principal study, are greatly confused on this very important subject; but that does not hinder its truthfulness. It should be remembered that this world is lost; that the saints are fallen in death; that Paradise is lost; that Jerusalem is trodden down of the Gentiles; that the tabernacle of David is fallen down, and his throne is in ruins; that Zion is ploughed as a field; that the sanctuary is yet under the vile tread of unsanctified Gentile feet; that the kingdom is under their power, and that the earth is yet under the curse. It should also be borne in mind that God, by all the holy prophets, has promised a restoration (for restitution signifies "a restoration of any thing to its former state") of these things.

We believe, then, that a restitution will commence at the return of our Lord.

16. Hence, I believe the immediate coming of the Lord will mark the commencement of the millennium, or times of restitution; and that the times of restitution will occupy the space of a thousand years. Glorious indeed will be the coming of our long absent Lord; for he will come in the glory of the Father, and with all the holy angels, to take his seat on the throne of his glory, to reign King of kings, and Lord of lords over the whole earth.

17. I believe that the first work of Christ under his millennial reign, will be to raise the dead saints and to change the living. And why should this not be? For his children are the price of his blood, his precious jewels, who have fallen under the power of death; and the restitution could not be complete without restoring them to life. There is abundance of scripture testimony on this point.

And secondly, we remark, that the next event in order under the reign of Christ, is the restoration of Jerusalem. It appears from plain Bible testimony, that Jerusalem in the land of Palestine, once the glory of the world, and the favored city of God, but now trodden down of the Gentiles, will yet be restored to more than its former greatness, perfection and glory; and thirdly, the Bible evidence proves to us the restoration of Zion, which was embraced in the city of Jerusalem, and was the place of the tabernacle and royal throne of David. But, says one, is not Zion, under the gospel dispensation, the church? Popular orthodoxy says it is. So ministers preach, poets sing, the press publishes, the churches talk and pray, and nearly every body think. But that they preach, sing, publish, pray, talk and think wrong, in this respect, at least, is certain from the abundant testimony of the Bible. We find Zion occurs but seldom in the New Testament; and that the church is not meant, will appear plain to every candid mind, by a brief examination of the texts in which it is found. (I will say no more on this point now, but will endeavor to take it up separately at some future time, if the Lord will.)

18. At the coming of the Lord, I believe that the Tabernacle of David will be rebuilt. To prove this point, what is understood by tabernacle? It is a tent, booth, or temporary dwelling. Now, what was the tabernacle of David? It was his temporary dwelling, which was located on Mount Zion, in the city of Jerusalem. There was his royal throne, where he temporarily reigned. There as a pilgrim he dwelt, looking for a better, more enduring and glorious city. Isaiah says, "In mercy hall the throne be established; and he shall sit upon it in truth, in the tabernacle of David." God's word means what it says; consequently, tabernacle of David means David's temporary dwelling, or royal palace. That tabernacle, that palace, that throne, has been thrown down. Mount Zion is "plowed as a field." But God has promised to redeem it; "build again the tabernacle of David," set up his throne there, on which Christ shall sit in robes of glory, and reign King of kings and Lord of lords.

19. In connection with this glorious work of restitution, or setting up the kingdom of God, I believe that twelve thrones will be given to the twelve apostles of the Lamb. They will be intimately associated with Christ in the government of the kingdom. Is this too literal for you? Then listen to the words of the Savior; he says; "When the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye (the apostles) also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Here it is evident that the apostles will sit on twelve literal thrones, as it is that Christ will actually sit in the throne of his glory. Both, doubtless, will be literally and gloriously fulfilled. (See also Luke 22: 30; Isa. 32: 1; Rev. 20: 4.) This must suffice on this point. It does appear, from many passages of Scripture, that the immortal saints will also take part in the work of executing the laws of the kingdom. For they are to be "unto our God, kings and priests; and . . . reign on the earth."

20. Finally, as this great subject presents itself in the clear light of divine truth, I view it thus; I believe that the kingdom will be set up at Jerusalem, in Palestine, and will be most perfectly organized after the following manner;—The Lord will come. The saints who sleep in Jesus will be raised, and with the living righteous be made immortal, and all be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. They will come with him to the Mount of Olives. Eden, or Palestine will be restored. Jerusalem will be rebuilt. Zion will be redeemed. The tabernacle of David will be raised up. The throne of David will be restored. Twelve thrones for the Apostles will be set up. The immortal saints will receive, as kings and priests, their respective appointments in the kingdom. And when the Kingdom of God is fully organized and restored to Israel, then the law will go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, to govern and enlighten the world and fill it with the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the seas. This I believe to be no fancy sketch, but a very faint description of that which will soon be a most glorious reality. Oh, may it soon be revealed to the joy of all the true heirs of glory! Amen.

Prayer is the rustling of the wings of the angels that are on their way bringing us the boons of heaven. Have you heard prayer in your heart? You shall see the angel in your house. When the chariots that bring us blessings do rumble, their wheels do sound with prayer. We hear the prayer in our own spirits, and that prayer becomes the token of the coming blessings. Even as the cloud foreshadoweth rain, so prayer foreshadoweth the blessing; even as the green blade is the beginning of the harvest, so is prayer the prophecy of the blessing that is about to come.—Spurgeon.

☞ The duties which we owe to our own moral being are the ground and condition of all other duties; and to set our nature at strife with itself for a good purpose, implies the same sort of prudence as a priest of Diana would have manifested, who should have proposed to dig up the celebrated charcoal foundations of the mighty Temple of Ephesus, in order to furnish fuel for the burnt-offerings on its altars. Truth, virtue, and happiness, may be distinguished from each other, but cannot be divided; they subsist by a mutual coinherence, which gives a shadow of divinity, even to our human nature.—Coleridge.

Letter from Bro. Frank Burr.

Bro. Grant:—Nature is putting on her robe of many hues. Another brief season of seed-time and harvest has come and gone, and the toiling millions of Earth's children have gathered their grain in store, and "cold winter is coming" is heard on every hand. Preparation must be made for it. Although many, very many, winters have come and gone, yet man has never become enough accustomed to its return to need to make no preparation for it. Neither did we ever yet hear of a man's jesting his neighbor for setting his house in order against its approach.

But there is another time approaching as surely as the season before us, and which will bring with it much more critical events. It is the Judgment. But do we see men preparing for it? Few, alas, how few! And even those few laughed at by others around them for their seriousness in the matter. And ofttimes the business of preparation is left in a half finished state for lack of decision enough to carry it on in the face of so much opposition.

And so the Judgment is coming—every day bringing it nearer and nearer—every breeze is bearing the world nearer and nearer the great day of God's wrath; and what can be done?

We cannot avert it. We do not wish to, for it is then and not till then that the saints shall possess everlasting joy. But we want the slumbering millions to awake to a sense of their situation. Who will come up to the great work of arousing a sleeping world? The harvest is great but the laborers are few."

Here is one, Bro. Grant, who has agreed to do the Lord's work. But what can one do? O, ye idlers in the vineyard, come up to labor! Ye fault finders help to remove the stumbling blocks and not increase them. Energy, determination, patience, perseverance, are needed and much may be done ere yet the harvest closes. Keep the brain working; keep the cry sounding for more workmen; keep the watchman at his post, and let the watchword be—"Jesus is coming, and many souls may yet be saved."

From Sr. P. Slater.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—We are truly living in a grand and awful time. Seducing spirits and doctrines of Devils are going through the length and breadth of the land; but Jesus is coming soon to save his little flock; and shall we be found among the jewels of the Lord in that day? When the trump of God shall sound to awake the sleeping saints, and change the living, shall we be there with a wedding garment on? What a blessed day that will be to the saints of God! But the Lord will have a tried people.

I have for one year past, been passing through trials deep and sore, and the chastening hand of God is still upon me; but amid all of my affliction I can say like one of old, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." I know that the grace of God will be sufficient for all that trust in the Lord. He will carry me safely through to the promised land; although I am the most unworthy of God's creatures. I thank God for trials. They have weaned me from this ungodly world. Brn. and sisters, we are almost home; eternal life will soon be ours. Yours in hope,

Paulina Slater.

LIVING WATER.

"Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again; but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him, shall never thirst."

Above the fountain, where the sparkling waters
Of pleasure frolic in the sunshine gay,
Luring by crowds, the youthful sons and daughters
Of earth from wisdom's pleasant, peaceful way,
Discern ye not, O! thoughtless, blooming train,
These words, "Who drinketh here shall thirst again?"

Far up among the heights of vain ambition,
Rises a spring that feeds the thirst for fame;
And he who drinks most deeply, proves most truly,
Whoever drinketh there shall thirst again.
Yet still the pilgrims to that mocking shrine,
Keep marching on in an unbroken line.

And hearts that throb not at the call of pleasure,
And answer not to proud ambition's call,
Beat strongly with the love of golden treasure,
And bind the fetters which their souls enthrall.
Bearing with fortitude the bitter pain
Of those whose thirst is equal to their gain.

Fast by the throne of God there flows a river,
Whose healing streams have reached this blighted shore;
And listen! all our thirsting souls, whoever
Drinks of this blessed water thirsts no more.
New life it giveth, an immortal breath,
That yields not to the kingly power of death.

For the Crisis.

Letters Illustrative of Christian Experience.—No. 1.

My Dear Sister:—I see no necessity of your being so much troubled, and yielding so often to doubts respecting your conversion, because you never experienced those awful convictions for sin, and that strongly marked change of heart, that is frequently, perhaps commonly, attendant upon the transition state. God gives us just as vivid a perception of our condition as sinners, as is needful in order to lead us to Christ for pardon. Some are so hardened in sin, and have so little inclination to live a life of piety, that he awakens a deep and realizing sense of inward depravity, and alarms the slumbering conscience to view the awful danger of persisting in a state of alienation from God.

When the will is stern and unyielding, the Holy Spirit strives more forcibly to bring it in subjection; hence more pungent conviction, producing greater distress of mind, is necessary. That individual who has been brought up religiously, and has a mind susceptible to religious impressions, and very conscientious, readily yielding to the monitions of the Spirit, will not experience those strong convictions for sin that are attendant upon the individual previously described. Such, at least, is the result of my own observation and experience.

There are those who seem to covet the remarkable conversion of St. Paul. They would fain behold some visible manifestation of the divine presence, by which they might like him be overcome. But such is not the ordinary method by which God works. Paul was an unbeliever in the divinity of Jesus Christ, and not only an unbeliever but an opposer, and was even then on his way to apprehend the disciples of Jesus, and bring them bound unto Jerusalem. To him, the Lord revealed himself personally, that he might be convinced that he was indeed the crucified and risen Son of God. His awakening was remarkable, but we have no account that his justification was any more striking than that of others.

Very simple is the relation of the conversion of the Ethiopian, who journeyed to Jerusalem to worship, probably as a proselyte. He was returning, and as he rode along in his chariot, he read Esaias the prophet. By an inward impression of the Spirit, Philip the evangelist was led to address the question to him, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" He answered, "How can I, except some man should guide me?" He then invited Philip to sit with him, who readily complied, and then began to explain to him the prophecy respecting the Messiah, and to show how evidently it was fulfilled in Christ, who had been crucified. The eunuch believed the testimony, and immediately, as a true convert should, desired to be baptised. Philip did not wait six months first, to see how he would hold out, but, no doubt thinking he could better endure by obedience to the command of Christ, he unhesitatingly went down into the water with him, and baptized him, and the eunuch went on his way rejoicing.

Now, my sister, I doubt not but that this simple and short experience was just as genuine, and as fully acceptable with God, as that of St. Paul. My own experience is much in harmony with yours. I was religiously educated. When but a mere child, my dear mother took me with her alone, and commended me to God in prayer. I was early taught the way of life. I was very strict, so far as respects outward sins, and was accustomed to pray much, from my childhood up to the time when I made a public profession of faith in Christ. When in my seventeenth year, I openly renounced the world, and presented myself at the altar for prayer, sincerely seeking to be justified through faith in Jesus. I wept over my fallen condition, and panted for salvation; but I experienced no deep distress of mind. I could eat and sleep, as formerly, and was in no terror on account of future punishment. I did not have a hard struggle to submit myself to God's will; I was all ready to yield, when, as the result of my decision to become a christian, I went forward for prayers. Had I understood then just how to exercise saving faith in Christ, I might have been saved at once. As it was, for a day or two I halted at that point; but when a brother said, "go to Jesus as you are; he has said, 'Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest;' and 'He that cometh to me I will in no no wise cast out;' now when you come, believe that he does receive you, and does give you rest, because he says he will;" I at once understood the way. I came thus to Jesus, when one was offering prayer at the commencement of the meeting, and at once I entered into peace. "Rest" came, but O, how gently! I could hardly realize the transition, it was so unmarked. Yet there was a change, and that I knew. The burden was gone, and all was quiet. I was impressed to speak of it, and this was my first cross in the narrow path. I arose timidly, and said that I believed the Lord had blessed me in some degree. The light shone more brightly then. Peace deepened a little more. Again I confessed the increasing evidence, and clearer dawned the morning, leading on toward the rising Sun.

No doubt many, who have thus attained the justifying grace, refuse to cherish it, because it is not more full and clear. Some lose it, by withholding the needful confession. Step by step the soul advances in the divine life, even unto the final consummation, when the entire being becomes perfected in glory.

Our great anxiety ought not so much to be respecting the precise time when we "passed from death unto life," as to know that we are now accepted and saved. We cannot rely on past experience; that is, we may not depend on it as evidence of present justification; but the important question is, Am I now right with God? Seek, my beloved sister, to understand present duty, leaving past and future results with God, and while you yield your will in perfect submission to Christ, it is your blessed privilege to reckon yourself the Lord's, whether you are in the vale or on the mountain's top. And if you belong to Christ, all that he has is thine. So says the sure word. Claim, then, the rich and abundant communications of his grace, that you may be prepared to instruct the ignorant, and witness well for God.

Yours in christian love,

Mary D. Wellcome.

The Believer "Rooted and Grounded in Love."

We need to be planted and take deep root in the soil of heavenly love. As a native tree taken from a hard, barren, uncultivated soil, and transferred into one prepared by agricultural skill, becomes flourishing and fruitful, so the believer, transplanted from nature into grace, under the care of the great Husbandman, flourisheth, and "bringeth forth much fruit."

Bro. Grant:—Nature is putting on her robe of many hues. Another brief season of seed-time and harvest has come and gone, and the toiling millions of Earth's children have gathered their grain in store, and "cold winter is coming" is heard on every hand. Preparation must be made for it. Although many, very many, winters have come and gone, yet man has never become enough accustomed to its return to need to make no preparation for it. Neither did we ever yet hear of a man's jesting his neighbor for setting his house in order against its approach.

But there is another time approaching as surely as the season before us, and which will bring with it much more critical events. It is the Judgment. But do we see men preparing for it? Few, alas, how few! And even those few laughed at by others around them for their seriousness in the matter. And ofttimes the business of preparation is left in a half finished state for lack of decision enough to carry it on in the face of so much opposition.

And so the Judgment is coming—every day bringing it nearer and nearer—every breeze is bearing the world nearer and nearer the great day of God's wrath; and what can be done?

We cannot avert it. We do not wish to, for it is then and not till then that the saints shall possess everlasting joy. But we want the slumbering millions to awake to a sense of their situation. Who will come up to the great work of arousing a sleeping world? The harvest is great but the laborers are few."

Here is one, Bro. Grant, who has agreed to do the Lord's work. But what can one do? O, ye idlers in the vineyard, come up to labor! Ye fault finders help to remove the stumbling blocks and not increase them. Energy, determination, patience, perseverance, are needed and much may be done ere yet the harvest closes. Keep the brain working; keep the cry sounding for more workmen; keep the watchman at his post, and let the watchword be—"Jesus is coming, and many souls may yet be saved."

From Sr. P. Slater.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—We are truly living in a grand and awful time. Seducing spirits and doctrines of Devils are going through the length and breadth of the land; but Jesus is coming soon to save his little flock; and shall we be found among the jewels of the Lord in that day? When the trump of God shall sound to awake the sleeping saints, and change the living, shall we be there with a wedding garment on? What a blessed day that will be to the saints of God! But the Lord will have a tried people.

I have for one year past, been passing through trials deep and sore, and the chastening hand of God is still upon me; but amid all of my affliction I can say like one of old, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." I know that the grace of God will be sufficient for all that trust in the Lord. He will carry me safely through to the promised land; although I am the most unworthy of God's creatures. I thank God for trials. They have weaned me from this ungodly world. Brn. and sisters, we are almost home; eternal life will soon be ours. Yours in hope,

Paulina Slater.

Michigan Church Conference.

Brethren from different parts of this State, and a few from Indiana, assembled in Leroy, Calhoun Co., pursuant to public notice, Friday, Oct. 15th, and continued in session over the following Sunday. The meetings were deeply interesting, and, toward the close, well attended by the people. Eight discourses were preached, and several hours of Friday and Saturday were spent in business. A number of topics, pertaining to christian faith and practice, were discussed with the best of feeling. A plan of united effort was devised, in which all present heartily concurred.

We organized under the name of the "Michigan Church Conference," and elected officers for the year as follows:

President, E. Miller, Jr., Mendon, St. Joseph Co.
Vice President, E. Hoyt, Grand Rapids.
Secretary, O. R. L. Crozier, "
Treasurer, Joel A. Simonds, "

These, with the five following brethren, constitute the Executive Board:

Daniel Weaver, Weaversville, Newaygo Co.; A. Currier, Ionia, Ionia Co.; Wm. H. Knapp, Galesburgh, Kal. Co.; Martin Hadsel, Burlington, Calhoun Co.; Warren Smith, Reading, Hillsdale Co.

Evangelists, E. Miller, Jr., A. N. Seymour, E. Hoyt, and O. R. L. Crozier.

Delegates to other State Conferences, O. R. L Crozier, and E. Hoyt his substitute.

To deliver annual sermon at next annual meeting, E. Miller, Jr.

To write address, O. R. L. Crozier, E. Hoyt, and J. A. Simonds.

Among the resolutions passed by the Conference, were the following:

Resolved, 1. That the present lamentable condition of the cause of gospel truth in this State, is, in a great measure, owing to a want of vigorous, self-sacrificing and systematic effort, on the part of those professing adherence to it.

2. That where several believers live near each other, it is their duty to associate themselves together in church capacity, elect elders and deacons, and hold public meetings every first day of the week to edify and exhort one another. When there is no one present to preach the word, we advise that religious exercises—prayer, singing, reading and expounding the Scriptures, exhortation and breaking bread—be conducted in an orderly manner, under the direction of one of the elders, or other person chosen for that purpose.

3. That we recommend the following mode of setting the churches in order:

Let a book be provided in which to record the names of members and the proceedings of the church. Then let the names of believers be recorded, under a heading something like the following:

"NAMES OF MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH IN ——"

Then let elders and deacons be elected from among those whose names are thus recorded, and a record of this and all other business of the church be kept in the church book.

4. That where several churches are situated conveniently for the purpose, it may be promotive of much good for them to unite in Quarterly Conferences, to hold meetings together once in three months, maintain preaching, &c.

5. That we will use our best endeavors to push forward the evangelical work this year.

6. That we solicit and urge our brethren in all parts of this State to seek favorable openings for our evangelists, and to aid them all they can by visiting with and introducing them to the people, by attending their meetings and inducing others to attend them, and by contributing for their support.

7. That we deprecate the writing out of a creed, discipline, or church covenant as a basis of christian fellowship and action, believing that such a practice has been fruitful of divisions and many other evils; and that the only means by which the church can be "one" is, to take the Bible as their only and sufficient rule of faith and practice.

8. That it is of the first importance for believers of the gospel to cultivate charity among themselves, not conniving at sin in each other, but with brotherly kindness, admonishing and forbearing one another in love.

9. That while a Scriptural faith compels us to differ from many professed christians, we will try to avoid all bitterness in speaking to or of them, having our efforts to correct their faith and practices spring from love rather than party zeal.

10. That, being aware that the enemies of truth will always seek to place its friends in a false light, by giving them opprobrious names, or invidiously associating them with those who have become notorious for some great errors or evil practices, we deem it our duty to use every suitable occasion and means to disabuse the minds of the candid, by setting forth our true belief and purposes.

11. That brethren living out of this State may act with us on an equal footing with ourselves, if they choose to do so.

12. That we return thanks to the brethren and friends in Leroy for their liberal hospitality in entertaining us while attending this Conference.

Our plan of effort is simple, and we hope it will be effective of great good in the upbuilding of the church. Its success will depend upon the hearty and liberal co-operation of our brethren throughout the State. Praying for the Divine blessing, let us, brethren, give ourselves anew and devotedly to the best of all causes. Let us act together. If our plan is found defective, it can be improved at future meetings. Doors are open, and calls to preach the word come in from all directions. Shall our evangelists and their families be provided for, so that they can answer these calls, and go forth and proclaim to dying men the glorious gospel of the blessed God? Those disposed to aid in this good work, can send their contributions to our Treasurer, Bro. Joel A. Simonds, of Grand Rapids, and the wishes of the contributors will be faithfully complied with. The business of the Conference will be carried forward under the direction of the Executive Board, which consists of nine brethren of well known ability and integrity.

Adjourned to meet at Grand Rapids, Friday, Oct. 2, 1858.

O. R. L. CROZIER, Secretary.

"The Branch of the Lord."

"In that day shall the branch of Jehovah (branch of the Lord) be beautiful and glorious." Isa. 4: 2. See also Jer. 25: 5, 6; Zech. 6: 12–13. Our Lord and Savior is here foretold as "The Branch." "He is called 'tsemach Jehovah'—sprout of Jehovah; that is, the Son of Jehovah." Hengstenberg Christology, p. 162. In this, Henstenberg gives us the grammatical value of the language aside from theological dogmas. He may possibly hold the popular opinion; but here he makes the "sprout of Jehovah" to be "the Son of Jehovah." Very well.

"THE BRANCH" is not, never was, nor ever can be the root or stock from which it grows! Yet "the Son of the Father"—the Sprout from the stock—must partake of the nature of the Father or stock, says some theorist. In reply I say; Yes, sir; this truth is just what we maintain. Nay, this is just what many around us are too blind to see! For they go on to confound all the essential and divinely asserted distinctions between the sprout and the stock from which it grew—between the Son and his Father from whom he sprang.

Unity as to nature, exists in all vegetable and all animal productions. But those who proceed on such grounds to confound "the sprout of Jehovah" with Jehovah himself, perpetrate a falsehood against all nature! Nay, they go further, and make the voice of the Lord recoil and echo this falsehood!

By this method, there would be no production in nature—no goings forth of the Almighty, as taught in Revelation, "from of old—from everlasting." For if the sprout can any how be the stock from which it grew—if "the Son" can be confounded with "the Father" who begat him, then all appearances of such descent are an imposition on the understanding of mankind. Then the Branch, though seemingly begotten, and apparently an emanation from the stock, is all a delusion. For, according to the assumption, "The Branch" is (both in the works and word of God,) the "very and Eternal God," from whom he sprang!

"LET GOD BE TRUE," we say, in his works and word. This language of Holy Scripture grows out of the facts that abound in every teeming field and flood. The voice of nature is truthful on this point. The word of God in Revelation gives to this voice of nature the authority and sanctions of Eternal Truth! Whoever objects, or contradicts,—"the Branch of Jehovah is the Son of Jehovah". J. B. C.

The Soul.—No. 4.

Having examined the first five texts in the Bible where the word nephesh, or soul, occurs, and found it most clearly proved that in all these examples it represents the whole organism of the being, and, consequently, that this is the primary use of the word, we now advance to examine the sixth text, which is in Gen. 2: 19.

"And out of the ground the Lord formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them; and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, (nephesh khayah) that was the name thereof." In this passage we have nephesh again applied to beasts, and used in its primary sense, representing the whole being. The same remark applies to Lev. 11: 10, 46. "And all that have not fins and scales in the seas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of every living thing, (nephesh khayah) which is in the waters." "This is the law of the beasts and the fowl, and of every living creature, (nephesh khayah—living soul,) that moveth in the waters, and of every creature (nephesh) that creepeth upon the earth." We do not see how it can be made any plainer, that it is equally correct to call beasts souls, and living souls, as it is men, and that the primary meaning of nephesh—soul—includes the whole being.

The seventh text in order, containing nephesh, is found in Gen. 9: 4. "But flesh with the life (nephesh) thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat." The next verse contains two more similar examples. "And surely your blood of your lives (nephesh) will I require; at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life (nephesh) of man."

We are now introduced to a new and frequent use of the word nephesh. It is here affirmed that the nephesh—soul—of the flesh, is the blood; but is applied, as before, to both man and beast, being rendered life. In the fourth verse it relates to beasts, and in the fifth to men, but meaning the same thing. In these passages and similar ones, we have an example of the synecdoche,* which frequently occurs in the Bible. The Scriptures affirm of Christ, that "he laid down his life (psukee) for us, and we ought to lay down our lives (psukee) † for the brethren." 1 John 3: 16. Psukee, in the New, corresponds with nephesh in the Old Testament. "The Son of man came . . . to give his life (psukee) a ransom for many." Matt. 20: 28. In another place we read, he "gave himself a ransom for all." 1 Tim. 2: 6. Without giving more examples, it will be seen that life is frequently put for the whole man, because man without life knows nothing, and can be of no service to any one.

But what is life? Is it an organized being or entity? Greenfield, in his lexicon, defines life to be "animated existence, state of being alive." Life, then, is not a being, but a principle. Hence, when nephesh (Heb.) and psukee (Greek) stand for the life of man, it is proper to say, in the language of Bishop Tillotson, "The soul of man is an active principle." But this principle is common to all living creatures. Job 12: 10. "In whose hand is the soul (nephesh) of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind." This passage shows that every living thing has soul,—more properly rendered life in this example. Again, Prov. 12: 10. "A righteous man regardeth the life (nephesh) of his beast." We take the life of man and of beast. Do we take an immortal soul from them? or let one escape? Certainly not; but we end their "animated existence."

Matt. 16: 25, 26. "For whosoever will save his life (psukee) shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life (psukee) for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? (psukee,) or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (psukee.) When a man's life is gone, all the world is worthless to him. Verse 25 would read strangely, to say, whosoever will save his immortal soul shall lose it. Dr. Clark says of the Scripture, "On what authority many have translated the word psukee, in the 25th verse, life, and in this (26th) verse, soul, I know not; but am certain it means life in both places."

When a ship perishes on the ocean with its passengers, we say, so many lives were lost. Do we mean, so many immortal souls lost? or that those men and women have lost the principle of life, and they themselves are sunk in the depths of the sea? If we shoot a man and a lamb through the heart, have we killed both? or only the lamb, and sent the man to heaven, or to hell torment? "What saith the Scripture?" "As the one dieth, so dieth the other." Eccl. 3: 19. We have found no proof yet that nephesh represents an immortal soul, or being.

Passages from Young and Milton.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I send you herewith the passages to which I referred in last week's paper.* The first is from Edward Young; the others are from the "Paradise Lost." C. F. HUDSON.

Rouse's Point, N. Y., Oct. 28, '58.

"Father of mercies! why from silent earth
Didst thou awake and curse me into birth?
Tear me from quiet, ravish me from right?
And make a thankless present of thy light?
Push into being a reverse of thee,
And animate a clod with misery?"
The Last Day.

"O, fleeting joys
Of Paradise, dear bought with lasting woes!
Did I request thee, Maker, from my clay,
To mould me man? Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me, or here place
In this delicious garden? As my will
Concurred not to my being, it were but right
And equal to reduce me to my dust,
Desirous to resign, and render back
All I received, unable to perform
Thy terms too hard, by which I was to hold
The good I sought not. To the loss of that,
Sufficient penalty, why hast thou added
The sense of endless woes? Inexplicable
Thy justice seems."

"Fair patrimony
That I must leave ye, sons; O were I able
To waste it all myself, and leave ye none!
So disinherited, how would ye bless
Me, now your curse! Ah! why should all mankind
For one man's fault thus guiltless be condemned,
If guiltless? But from me what can proceed,
But all corrupt, both mind and will depraved,
Not to do only, but to will the same
With me? how can they then acquitted stand
In sight of God?"

For the Crisis.

A Correction.

BRO. GRANT:—It is said, "It should be understood that Mr. Blain is not an Adventist, and has no sympathy with them, as such."

As my works and communications in papers have been mostly on the life and death question, many may not know my views on other points, in which we differ from the popular sects, and so it may be my duty to state them briefly in the Crisis, though brethren with whom I am familiar know them. My belief has been since 1837, when I got Bro. Miller's seventeen lectures printed, that Christ's second coming is near, and may be said to be "at the door"—that it will be personal—that the common notion of a spiritual millennium is wrong—that the purified earth will be the final home of the saints—that Christ is the Son of God, &c.

I have not believed that we should know the day nor year of Christ's return; nor that the time had, or has yet come, when we may look for him daily. My opinion has been for twenty years, that this may be said after 1868 arrives. For this opinion I will try and give my reasons at another time.

Though I am as free from sectarianism as any one, yet I have thought it wise to continue my standing in a Baptist church, believing I could advance truth the better by so doing. But mark—Mr. Dobney's church, to which I belong, does not believe in endless misery; and now, since so much light has gone forth, I would not belong to any church that held that doctrine, if the privilege were offered to me.

And now let the thousands of Advent brethren in fifteen States, among whom I have traveled the last five years, and with whom I have "taken much sweet counsel," judge as to the correctness and christian propriety of the above quoted statement.

JACOB BLAIN.

For the Crisis.

To the Scattered Pilgrims.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—When at the feast of Wilbraham, I promised to write a letter for publication in the Crisis; but the cares of this life have so taken up my mind, that I have hardly found time to fulfill my promise until this morning. I often think of those happy hours spent in that tented grove. I cannot forget those weighty sermons, those heart-cheering exhortations, those fervent prayers, with many soul-stirring songs of praise, which echoed through that lovely bower. My heart is filled with joy even now, while I review the scene. Never have I realized what it was to have our hearts knit together in love as then. Often have I thought of the last evening, when bathed in tears, so many gathered around the table of the Lord. Oh! what must have been the scene upon Calvary, when the sun veiled its face, and refused to look upon the scene. Oh! what love do I see manifested to us, in God sending his only begotten Son into the world to suffer and die. Where is the heart so hard that it cannot be melted at the thought?

But, dear brethren and sisters, this hour finds us still in a world of sickness and death;—in the enemy's land. Some of you may be tempted and suffer severe trials; remember the promise—"Ye shall not be tempted above what ye are able; but with the temptation I will make a way for your escape." These light afflictions which are but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not to the things which are seen, but to those things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, while the things which are not seen are eternal. Then, to have these trials work for us, we must keep our eye of faith fixed upon the things promised, which are not yet seen; for in this tabernacle we groan, desiring earnestly to be clothed upon with our house, which is from heaven; which will be when this vile body shall be fashioned like unto his glorious body; as Paul says: "We ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

Then let us see to it that we keep the witness of the Spirit; for we are the children of God by faith, and if children, then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, and it will soon be said unto us:—

"Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Never have I felt more like girding on the armor than at present. God has called us to fight, and clothes us with an armor that is able to quench all the fiery darts of the enemy. Remember, God does not put the weapon in our hand until we are clothed with the armor; for, says Paul, "Take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast-plate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." The sword is given last of all. He then adds: "Praying always, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints."

Thus we, like Paul, can open our mouths boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel, that we may in nothing be ashamed, but in all boldness magnify Christ in our body, whether by life or by death.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
C. B. TURNER.

For the Crisis.

Report of the Conf. in North Western Pennsylvania.

According to notice given, we met at the place appointed, and found a good congregation in waiting. We spoke to them from Luke 23: 42, 43; and endeavored to enforce upon the minds of the people the necessity of looking to Jesus and confessing him, so as to be remembered by him when he comes in his kingdom. After the discourse, Brn. Wendell, Wicks, Bush, Goodrich and Niles, then present, made some remarks upon the same, showing the different ways of confessing Christ, and enforcing the same upon saint and sinner.

Saturday morning, at 10 o'clock, Bro. Wendell, of Edenboro, Pa., gave a discourse from 2 Pet. 3: 17, 18, showing the necessity of taking heed to the things spoken of in the text, chapter and elsewhere, lest we be led away by the error of the wicked and fall from our own steadfastness; and exhorted us faithfully to grow in grace, &c. After the discourse, twenty-six brethren and sisters spoke, to the edification and comfort of each other.

Met again at 2 P. M. for business. Meeting opened by singing and prayer. The subject of Church Order was then introduced, and discussed at some length. All were in favor of Church Order, although a few were opposed to putting down their names. Quite a number gave in their names, identifying themselves as the church of God in Washington, Erie Co., Pa., believing the Word of God to be the only correct rule of faith and practice, and wished to be guided by the same. Some present spoke favorably of the result of organization in other places, &c.

Met again in the evening. Discourse by Bro. Niles of Hayfield, from Heb. 11: 6: "Without faith it is impossible to please God." He spoke of the faith of Abraham and the promises made to him; also of his not receiving the things promised, referring to the resurrection. Also, that eternal life was to be received through faith in Christ, which was to be given at the same time. Remarks by others.

Sunday morning, 10 o'clock, we spoke to a large congregation from these words:—"Hope deferred maketh the heart sick, but when the desire cometh it is a tree of life." Prov. 13: 12. At the close of the service, as there were a number of brethren and sisters present that were not with us the day before, the subject of Church Order was again brought up, and a statement made of what had previously been done. Quite a number more gave in their names. Officers of the church were then chosen. The following resolutions were then read and adopted:

1. Resolved, That the brethren now assembled in conference do all in their power to set in gospel order the Church of God in their respective localities.

2. That a Conference be appointed to meet in January, 1859, at Blooming Valley, Crawford Co., Pa.

3. That the different congregations send delegates to said Conference, to report their success in the above resolutions; also, what can be done in each locality for the support of an Evangelist.

4. That an invitation be extended to our brethren in New York and Ohio, that are near our borders, to unite with us in the good work.

5. That the above resolutions be sent to the Crisis and Expositor; also a report of the present Conference.

Bro. George Bush, from Busti, N. Y., a young man, (going to the college at Meadville, Pa.,) was next set apart for the work of the ministry; after which quite a number partook of the emblems of our crucified Lord.

Evening. Discourse by Bro. Wendell, from Amos 5: 18; 6: 3; in which he showed the difference between the desire of the righteous and of the wicked. Remarks and exhortations by other brethren. The interest being good, we appointed another meeting for Monday evening. We spoke to the people from these words:—"Repent ye, and believe the gospel." Mark 1: 15. After which, the brethren and sisters had a good time in confessing Jesus, and their faults one to another, praying with and for each other, until a late hour, when we parted, hoping to meet again soon in the kingdom of God.

To write address, O. R. L. Crozier, E. Hoyt, and J. A. Simonds.

Among the resolutions passed by the Conference, were the following:

Resolved, 1. That the present lamentable condition of the cause of gospel truth in this State, is, in a great measure, owing to a want of vigorous, self-sacrificing and systematic effort, on the part of those professing adherence to it.

2. 3. That we recommend the following mode of setting the churches in order:

Let a book be provided in which to record the names of members and the proceedings of the church. Then let the names of believers be recorded, under a heading something like the following:

"NAMES OF MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH IN ——"

Then let elders and deacons be elected from among those whose names are thus recorded, and a record of this and all other business of the church be kept in the church book.

4. That where several churches are situated conveniently for the purpose, it may be promotive of much good for them to unite in Quarterly Conferences, to hold meetings together once in three months, maintain preaching, &c.

5. That we will use our best endeavors to push forward the evangelical work this year.

6. That we solicit and urge our brethren in all parts of this State to seek favorable openings for our evangelists, and to aid them all they can by visiting with and introducing them to the people, by attending their meetings and inducing others to attend them, and by contributing for their support.

7. That we deprecate the writing out of a creed, discipline, or church covenant as a basis of christian fellowship and action, believing that such a practice has been fruitful of divisions and many other evils; and that the only means by which the church can be "one" is, to take the Bible as their only and sufficient rule of faith and practice.

8. That it is of the first importance for believers of the gospel to cultivate charity among themselves, not conniving at sin in each other, but with brotherly kindness, admonishing and forbearing one another in love.

9. That while a Scriptural faith compels us to differ from many professed [illegible] we will try to avoid all bitter[illegible] [illegible] having our [illegible] their faith and practices [illegible] love rather than party zeal.

10. That, being aware that the enemies [illegible] in a false light, by giving them opprobrious names, or invidiously associating them with those who have become notorious for some great errors or evil practices, we deem it our duty to use every suitable occasion and means to disabuse the minds of the candid, by setting forth our true belief and purposes.

11. That brethren living out of this State may act with us on an equal footing with ourselves, if they choose to do so.

12. That we return thanks to the brethren and friends in Leroy for their liberal hospitality in entertaining us while attending this Conference.

Our plan of effort is simple, and we hope it will be effective of great good in the upbuilding of the church. Its success will depend upon the hearty and liberal co-operation of our brethren throughout the State. Praying for the Divine blessing, let us, brethren, give ourselves anew and devotedly to the best of all causes. Let us act together. If our plan is found defective, it can be improved at future meetings. Doors are open, and calls to preach the word come in from all directions. Shall our evangelists and their families be provided for, so that they can answer these calls, and go forth and proclaim to dying men the glorious gospel of the blessed God? Those disposed to aid in this good work, can send their contributions to our Treasurer, Bro. Joel A. Simonds, of Grand Rapids, and the wishes of the contributors will be faithfully complied with. The business of the Conference will be carried forward under the direction of the Executive Board, which consists of nine brethren of well known ability and integrity.

Adjourned to meet at Grand Rapids, Friday, Oct. 2, 1858.

E. MILLER, Jr., President.
O. R. L. CROZIER, Secretary.

"The Branch of the Lord."

"In that day shall the branch of Jehovah (branch of the Lord) be beautiful and glorious." Isa. 4: 2. See also Jer. 25: 5, 6; Zech. 6: 12–13. Our Lord and Savior is here foretold as "The Branch." "He is called 'tsemach Jehovah'—sprout of Jehovah; that is, the Son of Jehovah." Hengstenberg Christology, p. 162. In this, Henstenberg gives us the grammatical value of the language aside from theological dogmas. He may possibly hold the popular opinion; but here he makes the "sprout of Jehovah" to be "the Son of Jehovah." Very well.

"THE BRANCH" is not, never was, nor ever can be the root or stock from which it grows! Yet "the Son of the Father"—the Sprout from the stock—must partake of the nature of the Father or stock, says some theorist. In reply I say; Yes, sir; this truth is just what we maintain. Nay, this is just what many around us are too blind to see! For they go on to confound all the essential and divinely asserted distinctions between the sprout and the stock from which it grew—between the Son and his Father from whom he sprang.

Unity as to nature, exists in all vegetable and all animal productions. But those who proceed on such grounds to confound "the sprout of Jehovah" with Jehovah himself, perpetrate a falsehood against all nature! Nay, they go further, and make the voice of the Lord recoil and echo this falsehood!

By this method, there would be no production in nature—no goings forth of the Almighty, as taught in Revelation, "from of old—from everlasting." For if the sprout can any how be the stock from which it grew—if "the Son" can be confounded with "the Father" who begat him, then all appearances of such descent are an imposition on the understanding of mankind. Then the Branch, though seemingly begotten, and apparently an emanation from the stock, is all a delusion. For, according to the assumption, "The Branch" is (both in the works and word of God,) the "very and Eternal God," from whom he sprang!

"LET GOD BE TRUE," we say, in his works and word. This language of Holy Scripture grows out of the facts that abound in every teeming field and flood. The voice of nature is truthful on this point. The word of God in Revelation gives to this voice of nature the authority and sanctions of Eternal Truth! Whoever objects, or contradicts,—"the Branch of Jehovah is the Son of Jehovah". J. B. C.

The Soul.—No. 4.

Having examined the first five texts in the Bible where the word nephesh, or soul, occurs, and found it most clearly proved that in all these examples it represents the whole organism of the being, and, consequently, that this is the primary use of the word, we now advance to examine the sixth text, which is in Gen. 2: 19.

"And out of the ground the Lord formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them; and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, (nephesh khayah) that was the name thereof." In this passage we have nephesh again applied to beasts, and used in its primary sense, representing the whole being. The same remark applies to Lev. 11: 10, 46. "And all that have not fins and scales in the seas, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of every living thing, (nephesh khayah) which is in the waters." "This is the law of the beasts and the fowl, and of every living creature, (nephesh khayah—living soul,) that moveth in the waters, and of every creature (nephesh) that creepeth upon the earth." We do not see how it can be made any plainer, that it is equally correct to call beasts souls, and living souls, as it is men, and that the primary meaning of nephesh—soul—includes the whole being.

The seventh text in order, containing nephesh, is found in Gen. 9: 4. "But flesh with the life (nephesh) thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat." The next verse contains two more similar examples. "And surely your blood of your lives (nephesh) will I require; at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life (nephesh) of man."

We are now introduced to a new and frequent use of the word nephesh. It is here affirmed that the nephesh—soul—of the flesh, is the blood; but is applied, as before, to both man and beast, being rendered life. In the fourth verse it relates to beasts, and in the fifth to men, but meaning the same thing. In these passages and similar ones, we have an example of the synecdoche,* which frequently occurs in the Bible. The Scriptures affirm of Christ, that "he laid down his life (psukee) for us, and we ought to lay down our lives (psukee) † for the brethren." 1 John 3: 16. Psukee, in the New, corresponds with nephesh in the Old Testament. "The Son of man came . . . to give his life (psukee) a ransom for many." Matt. 20: 28. In another place we read, he "gave himself a ransom for all." 1 Tim. 2: 6. Without giving more examples, it will be seen that life is frequently put for the whole man, because man without life knows nothing, and can be of no service to any one.

But what is life? Is it an organized being or entity? Greenfield, in his lexicon, defines life to be "animated existence, state of being alive." Life, then, is not a being, but a principle. Hence, when nephesh (Heb.) and psukee (Greek) stand for the life of man, it is proper to say, in the language of Bishop Tillotson, "The soul of man is an active principle." But this principle is common to all living creatures. Job 12: 10. "In whose hand is the soul (nephesh) of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind." This passage shows that every living thing has soul,—more properly rendered life in this example. Again, Prov. 12: 10. "A righteous man regardeth the life (nephesh) of his beast." We take the life of man and of beast. Do we take an immortal soul from them? or let one escape? Certainly not; but we end their "animated existence."

Matt. 16: 25, 26. "For whosoever will save his life (psukee) shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life (psukee) for my sake shall find it. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? (psukee,) or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (psukee.) When a man's life is gone, all the world is worthless to him. Verse 25 would read strangely, to say, whosoever will save his immortal soul shall lose it. Dr. Clark says of the Scripture, "On what authority many have translated the word psukee, in the 25th verse, life, and in this (26th) verse, soul, I know not; but am certain it means life in both places."

When a ship perishes on the ocean with its passengers, we say, so many lives were lost. Do we mean, so many immortal souls lost? or that those men and women have lost the principle of life, and they themselves are sunk in the depths of the sea? If we shoot a man and a lamb through the heart, have we killed both? or only the lamb, and sent the man to heaven, or to hell torment? "What saith the Scripture?" "As the one dieth, so dieth the other." Eccl. 3: 19. We have found no proof yet that nephesh represents an immortal soul, or being.

Passages from Young and Milton.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I send you herewith the passages to which I referred in last week's paper.* The first is from Edward Young; the others are from the "Paradise Lost." C. F. HUDSON.

Rouse's Point, N. Y., Oct. 28, '58.

"Father of mercies! why from silent earth
Didst thou awake and curse me into birth?
Tear me from quiet, ravish me from right?
And make a thankless present of thy light?
Push into being a reverse of thee,
And animate a clod with misery?"

The Last Day.

"O, fleeting joys
Of Paradise, dear bought with lasting woes!
Did I request thee, Maker, from my clay,
To mould me man? Did I solicit thee
From darkness to promote me, or here place
In this delicious garden? As my will
Concurred not to my being, it were but right
And equal to reduce me to my dust,
Desirous to resign, and render back
All I received, unable to perform
Thy terms too hard, by which I was to hold
The good I sought not. To the loss of that,
Sufficient penalty, why hast thou added
The sense of endless woes? Inexplicable
Thy justice seems."

"Fair patrimony
That I must leave ye, sons; O were I able
To waste it all myself, and leave ye none!
So disinherited, how would ye bless
Me, now your curse! Ah! why should all mankind
For one man's fault thus guiltless be condemned,
If guiltless? But from me what can proceed,
But all corrupt, both mind and will depraved,
Not to do only, but to will the same
With me? how can they then acquitted stand
In sight of God?"

A Correction.

BRO. GRANT:—It is said, "It should be understood that Mr. Blain is not an Adventist, and has no sympathy with them, as such."

As my works and communications in papers have been mostly on the life and death question, many may not know my views on other points, in which we differ from the popular sects, and so it may be my duty to state them briefly in the Crisis, though brethren with whom I am familiar know them. My belief has been since 1837, when I got Bro. Miller's seventeen lectures printed, that Christ's second coming is near, and may be said to be "at the door"—that it will be personal—that the common notion of a spiritual millennium is wrong—that the purified earth will be the final home of the saints—that Christ is the Son of God, &c.

I have not believed that we should know the day nor year of Christ's return; nor that the time had, or has yet come, when we may look for him daily. My opinion has been for twenty years, that this may be said after 1868 arrives. For this opinion I will try and give my reasons at another time.

Though I am as free from sectarianism as any one, yet I have thought it wise to continue my standing in a Baptist church, believing I could advance truth the better by so doing. But mark—Mr. Dobney's church, to which I belong, does not believe in endless misery; and now, since so much light has gone forth, I would not belong to any church that held that doctrine, if the privilege were offered to me.

And now let the thousands of Advent brethren in fifteen States, among whom I have traveled the last five years, and with whom I have "taken much sweet counsel," judge as to the correctness and christian propriety of the above quoted statement.

For the Crisis.

To the Scattered Pilgrims.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—When at the feast of Wilbraham, I promised to write a letter for publication in the Crisis; but the cares of this life have so taken up my mind, that I have hardly found time to fulfill my promise until this morning. I often think of those happy hours spent in that tented grove. I cannot forget those weighty sermons, those heart-cheering exhortations, those fervent prayers, with many soul-stirring songs of praise, which echoed through that lovely bower. My heart is filled with joy even now, while I review the scene. Never have I realized what it was to have our hearts knit together in love as then. Often have I thought of the last evening, when bathed in tears, so many gathered around the table of the Lord. Oh! what must have been the scene upon Calvary, when the sun veiled its face, and refused to look upon the scene. Oh! what love do I see manifested to us, in God sending his only begotten Son into the world to suffer and die. Where is the heart so hard that it cannot be melted at the thought?

But, dear brethren and sisters, this hour finds us still in a world of sickness and death;—in the enemy's land. Some of you may be tempted and suffer severe trials; remember the promise—"Ye shall not be tempted above what ye are able; but with the temptation I will make a way for your escape." These light afflictions which are but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not to the things which are seen, but to those things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, while the things which are not seen are eternal. Then, to have these trials work for us, we must keep our eye of faith fixed upon the things promised, which are not yet seen; for in this tabernacle we groan, desiring earnestly to be clothed upon with our house, which is from heaven; which will be when this vile body shall be fashioned like unto his glorious body; as Paul says: "We ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

Then let us see to it that we keep the witness of the Spirit; for we are the children of God by faith, and if children, then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, and it will soon be said unto us:—

"Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Never have I felt more like girding on the armor than at present. God has called us to fight, and clothes us with an armor that is able to quench all the fiery darts of the enemy. Remember, God does not put the weapon in our hand until we are clothed with the armor; for, says Paul, "Take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast-plate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." The sword is given last of all. He then adds: "Praying always, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints."

Thus we, like Paul, can open our mouths boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel, that we may in nothing be ashamed, but in all boldness magnify Christ in our body, whether by life or by death.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

For the Crisis.

Report of the Conf. in North Western Pennsylvania.

According to notice given, we met at the place appointed, and found a good congregation in waiting. We spoke to them from Luke 23: 42, 43; and endeavored to enforce upon the minds of the people the necessity of looking to Jesus and confessing him, so as to be remembered by him when he comes in his kingdom. After the discourse, Brn. Wendell, Wicks, Bush, Goodrich and Niles, then present, made some remarks upon the same, showing the different ways of confessing Christ, and enforcing the same upon saint and sinner.

Saturday morning, at 10 o'clock, Bro. Wendell, of Edenboro, Pa., gave a discourse from 2 Pet. 3: 17, 18, showing the necessity of taking heed to the things spoken of in the text, chapter and elsewhere, lest we be led away by the error of the wicked and fall from our own steadfastness; and exhorted us faithfully to grow in grace, &c. After the discourse, twenty-six brethren and sisters spoke, to the edification and comfort of each other.

Met again at 2 P. M. for business. Meeting opened by singing and prayer. The subject of Church Order was then introduced, and discussed at some length. All were in favor of Church Order, although a few were opposed to putting down their names. Quite a number gave in their names, identifying themselves as the church of God in Washington, Erie Co., Pa., believing the Word of God to be the only correct rule of faith and practice, and wished to be guided by the same. Some present spoke favorably of the result of organization in other places, &c.

Met again in the evening. Discourse by Bro. Niles of Hayfield, from Heb. 11: 6: "Without faith it is impossible to please God." He spoke of the faith of Abraham and the promises made to him; also of his not receiving the things promised, referring to the resurrection. Also, that eternal life was to be received through faith in Christ, which was to be given at the same time. Remarks by others.

Sunday morning, 10 o'clock, we spoke to a large congregation from these words:—"Hope deferred maketh the heart sick, but when the desire cometh it is a tree of life." Prov. 13: 12. At the close of the service, as there were a number of brethren and sisters present that were not with us the day before, the subject of Church Order was again brought up, and a statement made of what had previously been done. Quite a number more gave in their names. Officers of the church were then chosen. The following resolutions were then read and adopted:

1. Resolved, That the brethren now assembled in conference do all in their power to set in gospel order the Church of God in their respective localities.

2. That a Conference be appointed to meet in January, 1859, at Blooming Valley, Crawford Co., Pa.

3. That the different congregations send delegates to said Conference, to report their success in the above resolutions; also, what can be done in each locality for the support of an Evangelist.

4. That an invitation be extended to our brethren in New York and Ohio, that are near our borders, to unite with us in the good work.

5. That the above resolutions be sent to the Crisis and Expositor; also a report of the present Conference.

Bro. George Bush, from Busti, N. Y., a young man, (going to the college at Meadville, Pa.,) was next set apart for the work of the ministry; after which quite a number partook of the emblems of our crucified Lord.

Evening. Discourse by Bro. Wendell, from Amos 5: 18; 6: 3; in which he showed the difference between the desire of the righteous and of the wicked. Remarks and exhortations by other brethren. The interest being good, we appointed another meeting for Monday evening. We spoke to the people from these words:—"Repent ye, and believe the gospel." Mark 1: 15. After which, the brethren and sisters had a good time in confessing Jesus, and their faults one to another, praying with and for each other, until a late hour, when we parted, hoping to meet again soon in the kingdom of God.

For the Crisis.

An Exposition Desired.

Will Bro. E. Burnham give an exposition of 1 Thess. 5: 23 through the Crisis? R. B. B.

EXPOSITION.

"And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly." To sanctify is to set apart to a holy use. When we "sanctify" God in our hearts, we set him apart as the supreme object of our affections and worship. When Christ was "sanctified" and sent into the world, he was set apart to the holy work of being the Savior of the world. When Moses "sanctified" the people, he set them apart for a holy purpose. When we are sanctified through the truth, we are set apart to a holy life, and to be God's peculiar people. To be sanctified wholly is to be set apart, in all of our powers and organism, in all of our efforts and property, in all that we are and possess, to be entirely devoted to the service of God. "Your whole spirit and soul and body," was a form of expression among the Jews used to signify the whole man, with all his powers and faculties. I pray with Paul, that we may be "preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

EDWIN BURNHAM.

For the Crisis.

This Life—What is it?

One of sin, sorrow, temptations, cares, perplexities, pains, groans, sickness, sighs, storms, tears, fears, and ultimate death. All feel its keenest woes. The rich are not happy. The curse is upon all. The saint, too, suffers. The saint suffers much by nature's ills, but more from the enemies of the cross. He can expect nothing from them; but oh, how keenly the pain is felt by those who are led to experience the sharp darts of so-called friends! What so embitters this life as the cold, sarcastic, inhuman treatment of "false brethren!"

This life! How many tears are flowing swiftly upon its gloomy pathway. How many faded flowers and blighted buds hang drooping over its streets. Hark! hear the mournful sounds from the many cells. See! that man of worldly pleasure has exchanged the song of joy for that of sorrow; the smile of hope to the frown of despair. Turn where you will, and where is a spot, a scene, a people, in and among whom you could desire to "live always?" Truly, "if in this life only we have hope . . . then are we of all men most miserable."

O, life of pain, O, life of woe,
When will your latest sad tears flow?

But there is a brighter side to this picture—look at it:—"And God shall wipe all tears from off all faces." Happy day! bright morning! Blessed immortality! Then shall the saints with "long life" be satisfied. Then shall friendship be pure. Dear pilgrims, I often exclaim, "Who shall be saved?" Can I? Can you? Yes; the "blood of Christ cleanseth" us from all sin, when standing before God. I long for that day. Haste! heavenly choir, and let those sweet songs charm me. Sweet strains, salute my ear.

With these anticipations I turn away from all the sorrows of this life, esteeming them "light afflictions" of momentary character, and trust they will "work out" for me an exceeding "weight of glory" in the day of God's power and love.

Amen! my heart replies,
And let amens arise
From all the heavenly throng;—
Amen! the sound prolong.

Danville, C. E. M. MATHEWS.

From Sr. A. M. S. B.

BRO. GRANT:—Weary of the toils, trials and turmoil of this existence, "how sweet to my soul is communion with saints;" to have the interchange of thought with those of like precious faith, is like water to a thirsty soul in a dry and barren land; for we are pilgrims and strangers here, as all those who have trod the narrow way before us were. We can tarry but a night. Here is no rest.

"Onward, then, with courage go,
Long we shall not dwell below;
Soon the joyful news will come,
Child, your Father calls, come home."

Are we not nearing the port? And although we have been rather fast in our reckoning, nevertheless, we have felt no condemnation, for we have had

"Signs there's no mistaking, Proclaim Messiah near."

Said Jesus, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up." This seems to be addressed to the disciples of Jesus in these last days of peril, and with them it is a glorious theme that their King is coming so soon. The true church see the signs fulfilling (Dan. 12: 4,) and cry "Thy kingdom come."

Foreign News.

HALIFAX, Nov. 4.

The royal mail steamship America, Capt. Miller, from Liverpool, 10 A. M., 23d ult., arrived at this port at 12 o'clock last night.

A dispatch from Valentia reached London on the night of the 20th, stating that intelligible signals were again being received from Newfoundland through the cable. The signals were very distinct, and the words received were—"Daniell's now in circuit." Authority was at once given to use the Daniell's battery likewise at Valentia. In his letter to the press, announcing the gratifying fact, Saward, secretary of the company, says—"This, however, though encouraging, must not be regarded as a permanent state of things, as it is still clear there is a serious fault in the cable, while, at the same time, it is not at present absolutely clear that any except the most extraordinary, and, to the cable, dangerous efforts, can be made, more especially on this side, to overcome the existing obstacles in the way of perfect working."

The London Times continues to attack Commissioner Reed for his part in the Chinese negotiations, characterizing him as the "cat's paw of Russia." The Times eulogizes the diplomacy of the Russian Minister, and says the treaty he obtained deserves to be ranked among the highest order of diplomatic papers.

Another demonstration against the introduction of the confessional in the Church of England, had taken place in London.

FRANCE.

The French Portuguese question is in statu quo. The Coligny had arrived in the Tagus, with the French attache on board, but no definite arrangements were come to.

Considerable modifications in the recent stringent passport rules were being made. The Minister of the Interior has sent orders to the frontiers and seaport towns for the authorities to consider passports henceforth as titles to aid, and not cause for delays or annoyance.

TURKEY.

A formidable insurrection had broken out at Passavina, in Turkey. Many Mussulmen were killed. Troops were marching to the disturbed districts.

INDIA.

Operations were carried on without flagging against the scattered rebels.

The Bombay Times says the strength of the rebels in Oude and adjacent districts is estimated at 70,000 men and 56 guns.

It is said nine columns will be organized at Lucknow to traverse the country in different directions, while the commander-in-chief will remain in Lucknow watching the progress of affairs.

The Times correspondent writes: If any credence is to be attached to the number of Sepoys reported slain, not less than 38,000 or 40,000 had been killed or executed; and if we add casualties by sickness, wounds and wants, there is probably not more than 20 per cent. of the whole Bengal army in existence, not including disarmed regiments. It is said there is to be an amnesty on proclamation of the Queen's authority.

RUSSIA.

Accounts received from the frontiers of Russia, dated the 12th of October, state that disturbances which have taken place in the eastern provinces of Russia are more serious than they were stated to be. Several peasants from the German provinces on the Baltic have been transported to Siberia. A traveller arrived from the southern provinces of Russia, states that the insurrection of the peasants there has assumed a serious character.

AUSTRIA.

A letter from Vienna, coming from an official source, states that Austria has no desire to cross the frontier into Servia; that she is most anxious to avoid warlike expenditure and political complications; and that whenever a frontier district is in a disturbed state, she draws attention to the fact at Constantinople, and the government of the Sultan never fails to provide a sufficient number of troops to maintain tranquility.

THE EAST.

The news brought by the last mail that the Montegrins had put the Turks to flight and occupied the quarantine building of Sutorina, is confirmed by the Journal de Constantinople of the 13th inst.

According to letters received from the Principalities, there was a rumor that Prince Daniel was marching against Grahova.

Difficulties have arisen which have suspended the settlement of the Montenegrin frontiers. Turkey and Austria refuse the cession of the boundary near Podgoritza.

An explosion is imminent in Candia.

The Albanian troops are exasperating the Christians.

"The fifth and last of the Jaffa murderers has been caught at Nablous, and is retained there in prison. He will be sent for. The Arabs have recently had an affray at Nablous, in which some five hundred, (so the report says) were killed."

A letter from Alexandria, Egypt, dated Sept. 27th, says; "The Moslems of Jeddah and the Turkish troops sent there have had a battle. No particulars given."

Domestic News.

IMPORTANT DISCUSSION.—Rev. Dr. Litch, of Philadelphia, and Elder Miles Grant, of Boston, will discuss the following question, in the Lecture Room of the Boston Music Hall: "Do the Scriptures teach the doctrine of the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" The discussion to commence Tuesday evening, Nov. 9th, at 7 o'clock, and continue four successive evenings.—Boston Ledger.

RELIC OF A FORMER WORLD.—The Waco (Texas) Democrat states that the citizens of Sumpter, Trinity county, while digging a well on the square, after having gone some 23 feet through a soft limestone rock, came to a piece of pine timber, hewn out six by twenty inches square, bearing visible marks of the club and broadaxe. Four feet below this piece of timber, through the soft rock, they struck a fountain of excellent water.

The present Czar of Russia has reconstituted the Bible Society, which was suspended during his father's reign, making it a donation of 25,000 roubles, (about $20,000) and promising it an annual subscription of 10,000 roubles. There is a new edition of thirty thousand of the New Testament in Finnish and Esthonian, and many religious books and tracts are circulated.

RAILROAD FRAUD IN RUSSIA.—A letter in the London News from St. Petersburg, states that calculations made by Prof. Struve, the Astronomer, show that the actual length of the railroad between St. Petersburg and Moscow, which is built on an air line, is no less than 88 and a half wersts (about sixty miles) shorter than its nominal length of 607 wersts, or, in other words, that the government, for whose account the railroad was constructed, has had to pay about one-seventh of the value, or twelve millions of roubles, more than it ought to have paid. As the rolling stock of the road was furnished by an American company at so much per werst, of course there has also been a great overcharge for that part of the concern. The Emperor was greatly excited on learning these facts, and gave orders for a strict investigation, with a view to the punishment of the perpetrators of these frauds, but as many persons of the highest rank are implicated, it is not likely to be pushed; it will more probably be hushed up.

☞ It is an oriental idea that the spider draws its venom from the rose; and thus it is that too often from the sweetest sources comes the blight of happiness and human affections.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Bristol, Oct. 25th, of scarlet fever, JAMES ALFRED, youngest child of Frederick and Elizabeth Northrop, aged 3 years 6 months.

His illness was most distressing, and he lingered under intense suffering for nearly three weeks; but all his sufferings have now ended in blessed rest.

Peaceful are his silent slumbers,
Peaceful in the grave so low;
He no more may join earth's numbers,
He no more its woes shall know.

Parent, hush thy voice from weeping,
Bid the bitter tear be dry,
Soon thy child shall wake from sleeping,
You shall meet him in the sky.

Blessed Jesus, speed thy coming,
Scatter life within the tomb!
Bid the dead in thee reposing
Wake to everlasting bloom!

Bro. and sister Northrop are greatly comforted in this time of trouble by the gospel of life to the dead at Christ's soon coming.

NOTICES.

Notice.

Having been providentially prevented from going to New York as soon as I anticipated, (being called home by the illness of my mother, who is now better,) I would say that till Nov. 25th letters may be addressed to me, care of J. J. REED, 43 Centre Street, New York.

H. L. HASTINGS.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 1st, '58.

☞ Will Bro. S. S. Brewer please come to Pawlings, N. Y., to our Conference, commencing Nov. 10th and continuing over the Sabbath? JOHN B. DODGE.

Notice.

The second quarterly Conference of Fox River District, will be holden at Shabbona Grove, commencing Nov. 25th, at 7 o'clock P. M. MOSES CHANDLER, Evangelist.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference at Pawlings, N. Y., commencing Nov. 10th, and continuing over the following Sunday. We expect those preaching brethren to come that feel directed by the Lord, and can trust the Lord for their pay, as most of the brethren here are poor. We invite all the brethren and sisters that can, and others that feel interested, to come to this meeting. Come saints and sinners. Those that come will be provided for while here.

Stephen, in behalf of the church of God in Pawlings.

Book Notice.

I would say to the Brn., that I have just got printed, in Boston, an improved edition of DEATH NOT LIFE, in paper covers, and bound,—also GLAD TIDINGS and my two tracts on the word HELL, and Foster's noted letter. They can be had of Bro. Grant at the prices now noticed in the Crisis, and by writing me at Buffalo. Brethren in the ministry can have them to sell on commission, and I hope they will send soon, and get a supply for the winter. I expect to remain in the East till Jan., and will visit brethren by their sending a request to the Crisis. JACOB BLAIN.

Boston, Oct. 2, 1858.

Appointments for Danielsonville, Ct.

Bro. A. Fox, Nov. 28th and Dec. 5th.
Bro. S. G. Matthewson, Nov. 14th and 21st.

NOTICE.—The brethren and sisters in Carmel, Me., have established a regular conference at Robinson school-house, near Bro. Geo. L. Robinson's, the third Saturday in each month, and will, if they can, have preaching. Give them a call.

In behalf of the church. N. F. NASON.

Notice.

There will be a conference in Holden, Me., in the school house near Bro. Isaac Clewley's, commencing Nov. 12th, and continuing over the Lord's day. Bro. L. Boutell will attend the meeting, and we expect I. Damman will be here also. We desire as many of the servants of God to come as God will. Brethren and sisters come, rally once more from the north, south, east and west, and let us raise up the standard of truth in the name of the Lord. For the Brethren,

ISAAC CLEWLEY.

Notice.

If the Lord permit, a conference will be held in West Poland, Maine, commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 11th, at 7 o'clock, and continuing over the Sabbath. Our ministering brethren in Maine are especially invited to attend. We wish all our brethren and sisters to come filled with the Spirit, and labor to see the work of God prosper, and the church built up in the most holy faith.

For the Brethren, JESSE GAY.

Notice.

Whereas, Bro. Champlain has resigned the pastorship of the River Point Advent Church, R. I., we have chosen Bro. E. Bellows as pastor. Bro. Bellows will preach one Sunday in a month—the first. The other three Sundays are left open to the preaching brethren whom we may invite. We hope those we have invited will come soon and see us.

For the Brethren. JOHN P. BABCOCK.

☞ NOTICE.—We would earnestly request those who are indebted to this office for Hymn Books, to remit us the amount due, as we, in all cases, have to pay cash for the same, and cannot afford to be out of the money. Probably some of our brethren have overlooked the fact that they are so long indebted for books. We would, therefore, in all love and earnestness, call their attention to the matter, as the funds of the paper are too contracted to afford lengthened credit.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Providence permitting, I will commence a series of meetings at Poultney, Vt., in Union Hall, Nov. 21st, and continue one week or more.

BAPTISM OF CHRIST IN JORDAN.

The setting sun threw far and wide
His rays oblique, of gorgeous sheen,
And Jordan rolled his limpid tide
Between the banks of brightest green.

Down in the stream which swept along
The great "fore-runner" calmly stood,
Whilst he addressed th' attentive throng,
And blessed the dripping multitude.

No popish sprinkling was the rite
Which the illustrious Baptist gave;
For in the river, clear and bright,
He plunged them 'neath the flashing wave.

The "dipper" paused—lo! from afar,
With mein majestic and divine,—
Whilst round his brow a bright tiar
Of heavenly glory seems to shine,

A stranger comes. "Behold the Lamb
Of God!" it is the Baptist's cry,—
"Who, sent by Him,—the great I AM,—
Is doomed for sinful man to die.

"Lo! it is he of whom I spoke,
Whose sandals I scarce dare unbind,
Who, with a mighty conqueror's stroke,
Shall rive the sin-bonds from mankind!"

A murmur creeps from rank to rank,
The promised Sacrifice to greet;
And as he stands upon the bank,
The waves leap up to kiss his feet.

The Baptist, with humility,
Said, "This unseemly might appear—
"I've need to be baptized of thee,
And yet thou comest to me here!"

"Suffer it to be so now, for we Must thus fulfill all righteousness,
That others may not have a plea
To make their duties' burden less."

The Savior treads the silver sands,
The waters lave his sacred feet,
And seem to dance and clap their hands,
So joyous is their tinkling beat.

The wave divides, then closes o'er
With hollow dash his radiant head,
As did the grave, when, bathed in gore,
Three days he lay among the dead.

But soon emerging from the tide,
He rises blooming, glorious, bright!
And lo! the heavens open wide,
And pour on him their flood of light!

And rushing down the dazzling way,
The Holy Spirit, like a dove,
Comes on white pinions, like the day,
And rests upon this Son of Love.

And lo! a voice from heaven saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Christian Character.

We often hear it said, that christian character is our only test of fellowship. But as there are many standards raised by man, it conveys a very indefinite idea as to what we consider to be christian character. Men that live a moral life, and are honest, gentle, benevolent, and talk of the love of God, and pray, sustain some characteristics of a christian. Now if this is christian character, then we must throw our mantle of charity over the Shakers, Spiritualists and Universalists, and hold them to be christians, while they deny some of the most prominent truths of the Bible. If these moral characteristics constitute men christians, while they deny a part of the word of God, then why not fellowship those as christians who deny the whole of the word of God, but live good moral lives?

It may be said, that men must believe the Bible to be christians. That may be true, but HOW MUCH of the Bible must a man believe to make him a christian? All sects that call themselves christians, believe the Bible, or at least a part of it. Shakers, Mormons, Spiritualists, Universalists, Methodists, Baptists, Adventists, &c., all profess to believe the Bible, and of all these classes, we find those that who are gentle, kind, benevolent, and pray and talk of the love of God. Now, if because men talk good, and use good words in prayer, and live a kind of a moral life, we are to hold them as christians; why is it not just as well to unite with some one of them, and refrain from mentioning the unpopular truth and light that have shone upon our pathway? I want to be charitable, and would not cast off one of God's little ones for my right hand: but it does seem to me that there is great danger of lowering the standard so low, that it will not save men in the coming day. There is an awful responsibility resting upon God's watchmen. If they lower the standard of truth, and the people follow it, and are lost at the last day, their blood will be required at the hands of the watchmen.

I think we may find a test in the Bible by which we may know men and decide what constitutes christian character. I am aware that this is a very nice point to settle. In the first place, we want to find the principle on which men are to be judged by the Lord; and when we have ascertained that, we have the principle by which we can decide what constitutes christian character. Hear what Jesus saith, John 12: 48. "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." We may learn from this what constitutes christian character.

1st. We must receive Jesus, or believe on him. But what is it to believe on him? Let John answer. 1 John 5: 10–11. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the RECORD that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." We learn by the above, that to believe on the Son, is to believe the record that God gave of his Son. Hence I conclude that it is necessary to believe right about the Son of God in order to be christians.

2d. We are to receive the words of Christ. How receive them? Ans: In our faith. Now, in summing up this testimony, we come to the following conclusions:

1st. That we must believe on the Son of God according to the record that God has given of him: and all that do not believe this record, make God a liar; hence they do not sustain a christian character.

2d. That we must receive the words of Christ, not simply to assert them as truth, but we MUST BELIEVE them, and practice them in our lives; and in doing this, we shall take a course that will separate us from the world, and a worldly-minded church. Then again, if we receive the word of Christ, we shall take heed to that portion of it wherein he has spoken of his second coming; and in taking heed to that word, we shall identify ourselves with that truth. Let us bring one more testimony on this point. John 12: 36. "While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light." "Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you." We have in the above the words of Jesus. Suppose that men will not walk in the light? Then they are not the children of the light, and cannot have fellowship one with another; for it is by walking in the light that we are to have the fellowship. 1 John 1: 7. So far as the light shines upon our path, we are accountable to God; and every man that walks in the light so far as it shines in his path, will be justified by that light, and no further. If men take the liberty to shut the light out of their path, or refuse to use the means that are placed within their reach to get the light; or take the liberty to reject a part of the word of God as non-essential; they should not expect the fellowship of those that take the opposite course. And believing as we do, that we have the last great crowning light of the gospel dispensation, how can we say that it is just as well with men when they reject it, and will not listen to it? How far men have rejected truth in this age, we cannot tell; but when we present it to them, and they turn a deaf ear, and reject the word of God, there is certainly a lack of love for the truth; and to say that such sustain a christian character, is to deny the standard of truth.

I am satisfied that unless we believe the gospel of Christ, we cannot sustain a christian character. The gospel is defined, by Christ, in Matt. 28: 20. And christian character is defined in Mark 16: 16, by the language, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved." Let us not lower the standard of truth for the sake of having the favor of the world, but let us be as "wise as serpents and harmless as doves," and declare the whole truth, and not forget that God has raised up men to proclaim, "Behold he cometh." The way for us to save men, or "catch fish," is not to get down into the stream with them, but throw the bait of truth, and those that are hungry for it, will eat it, and be saved by it; and sometimes when they wont bite the bait, it is necessary to throw the spear and take some in that way; but when we catch fish in this way, it will frighten some, and some fishermen think it is rather a cruel way to take them, but nevertheless, it is necessary to catch them in that way sometimes.

We ought not to go fishing and catch toads, snakes and frogs, and call them fish; but let us learn the difference between fish and frogs, and bait for fish with the word of truth. J. HEMENWAY.

Bible Order.

What is Bible order, in the Church, in particular? This question I will now attempt to answer in detail, and give chapter and verse; and then let him refuse who dare!

It is Bible order to preach the Gospel everywhere, and to all people, as the Lord may open our way to do.

Mark 16: 15. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

2.

It is Bible order to baptize those who believe in Jesus Christ.

Matthew 28: 19. "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

3.

It is Bible order to attend to the ordinance of the Lord's supper, after being baptized.

Acts 2: 41, 42. "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers."

It is Bible order to have churches—not "bands," but churches,—plural!

2 Cor. 11: 28. "Besides these things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the CHURCHES." The word churches occurs about thirty times in the New Testament—but who would think so to see the alarm of some good people at that word? O consistency!

Ordaining elders in every church is Bible order.

Acts 14: 23. "And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed."

They did not ordain or choose "committees," but "elders"—not one "elder," but "elders,"—plural.

It is Bible order to have deacons in churches.

Phil. 1: 1. "Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops (elders) and deacons." The office of the deacon is referred to, in particular, several times in the New Testament. What about those who have neither elders or deacons? Are they in the order of God? Shall we ignore what the Holy Spirit has ordained?

It is Bible order to have other "helps," or "servants" in the churches, as they may need. See 2 Cor. 8: 19; Rom. 16: 1; and other places.

8.

It is Bible order to have church meetings. Acts 14: 27. "And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had opened the door of faith to the Gentiles."

9.

Church prayer meetings are in the order of God. See Acts 12: 5, and 12.

10.

Church discipline is in the order of God. See Matthew 18: 17, and the connection.

Farmer, can you make your grass grow without the sun and rain? No. So the church cannot flourish out of the order of God. Can you make hay without sunshine? No. So cannot the church be happy out of the order of God. Sailor, can you sail your vessel without wind or steam? No. So cannot the church be efficient out of the order of God. Why have we been a scattered, and broken, and feeble people? Because we have been out of the order of God—yes, out of His order both in our spirit, and in our practice. What shall we do? Shall we continue this wrong, and grieve the Holy Spirit, or shall we repent and honor the work of the Holy Spirit? Shall we tempt God any longer by refusing a very important part of the gospel of His Son, or shall we submit to the Bible, and lay aside our own foolish wisdom and selfishness?

I will submit to God and the Bible.

For the Crisis.

The Blessed Bible—What is it?

1st. It is our heavenly Father's good and glorious directory, that points out in a most emphatic and beautiful manner the way of salvation to a perishing world.

2d. It is the great fountain of heavenly knowledge and wisdom calculated in the economy of God to beautify and adorn the church of Christ, and fully qualify it to be a bright luminary or moral conservative of mankind.

3d. It is the only true and infinite source of all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, designed to strengthen, elevate, and encourage the faith of God's elect, in the midst of the moral darkness, apostacy and perils of this last degenerate age.

4th. It is the sure word of prophecy, or history of the world given in advance, by which the christian mariner discovers his latitude and longitude, or near proximity to the haven of eternal rest and glory, where he is safely anchored from all the dangers and disasters of a perilous voyage.

5th. It is the book of books, from which we derive all the faithful promises of God to the children of men, relative to the advent of the Messiah, the resurrection of the saints, the kingdom of God, the crown of life, the mansions of bliss, the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, &c, &c., which constitute the true hope of every devoted believer in our Lord Jesus Christ.

And finally, it is the first and the last and the only infallible creed or rule of faith and practice which God has been disposed to confer upon the world. If these things be literally true of the word of God, of what infinite value and importance it is to every living soul on earth; and what special regard and reverence should we pay to the ever living and holy oracles of God. How careful, diligently careful, should we be in all our conversation, actions, and thoughts, that we do not violate any of the pure precepts of our great High Priest. While we live in faithful conformity to the truth, our hearts are daily watered with showers of the grace of life, and we can but feel that we have an unction from the heavenly sanctuary which purifies, sanctifies and redeems us from all unrighteousness, and qualifies us for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, to be living and active members of the Royal family, and to shed abroad abundantly a holy and sanctifying influence, together with the unsearchable riches of our Lord Jesus Christ for the salvation of Adam's race. Cause in the West.

Thursday, Aug. 12th. Left home for Indiana, Laporte Co. Spent about ten days with the brethren at Union Mills and Kingsbury. The brethren here are building a very fine house of worship. I hope the blessing of God will abide with them. Left Monday for Laporte. Preached there in the evening. Tuesday started for Illinois. Meeting commenced at Earlville the 25th. In the evening we held the meeting in the Methodist meeting house. Had a good gathering and a glorious time. Baptized three.

Monday, the 30th, went to Ottawa, and preached four evenings to the church over which Bro. Morgan is pastor. Friday left for Amboy, Lee Co. Commenced meeting there on Saturday evening. A few brethren there. Preached three times. Good prospects for a church.

Sept. 8th left home, in company with Bro. Janes, for Sweetland, Iowa, to attend the Quarterly Meeting, Had a refreshing time. The Lord was with us.

Sept. 17th went to Brown Co. On my way spent one Sunday with the brethren in Hancock Co. At Rough and Ready found Bro. Pratt's family well. Tuesday left for Brown Co., Walker's Neck. Expected our tent, having shipped it from Davenport, Iowa; but did not get it. However, the brethren bought ten bolts of cotton cloth and made a tent, and pitched it on Thursday. We found the cause low, but the meeting resulted in great good.

Monday evening preached about three miles from where we had our tent meeting, at a school-house near Bro. Raymond's. Had a good time.

My next meeting was at Elizabeth, Jo Davis Co., Oct. 8th, but not being able to attend, I engaged Bro. Janes to go for me. He baptized two, From there I expected to have gone to Wis., and from there to Strawberry Point Conference; but had to disappoint them; expect to visit them soon. As ever in hope,

The Bible.

ARE THE SCRIPTURES A SEALED BOOK?

Some few weeks since, in a communication addressed in your paper, I expressed a desire, God willing, to make some remarks upon the above subject, believing that the world at large, but the ministry especially, were too prone to so consider them. The belief of the mass is based upon the declarations of the ministers, and hence the prevalence of the opinion that they who seek to understand the Word of God as it is written, are mere enthusiasts, profane and unrighteous, because they seek to understand what is not given them to know. I have heard ministers declare, when questioned in regard to certain passages of Scripture, which, according to their literal reading opposed the doctrines they taught, say—"These are things we are not to understand—be not troubled about them." But why is this? let us inquire. We hold that the Bible is true, and the professing christian world will not, at least in word, gainsay it. Then if true, it is all true, for if an emanation from God, it partakes of the nature of God, and God is truth. If true, then all its parts must harmonize, for truth is harmony. It is not jarring or discordant in its element, but in perfect harmony, even as the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost harmonize in their characters and attributes. Then if a doctrine is taught that will not harmonize with Scripture in all its parts, is the doctrine at fault, or is the Scripture? Surely not the Scripture, for it is the Word of God. It is the truth, and will harmonize with itself if not perverted by the fallible reason of man, which declares it means thus and so, when it itself expressly declares the reverse. If as a mortal man, a judge, I should decree a certain punishment upon a criminal, would you set to work to say, "he means so and so," "he does not mean that, he means this?" No; my language is plain, the meaning is comprehensible; there is no mystery—no hidden meaning about it. And "shall mortal man be more just than God? Oh, what an assumption! What a dangerous expedient! Does God speak in less plain language than man? Is it more difficult to be understood? No; not if you take his language as it stands—not if you understand him as you would understand men, by the language he uses.

But, says one, we are finite beings and cannot comprehend infinity. Granted; then why seek to comprehend at all? Why puzzle your minds, why distract your brain trying to comprehend what you yourselves declare to be incomprehensible? Why erect your creeds, why set forth your dogmas upon a basis which you declare unfathomable? Are not they incomprehensible, illusory, vain imaginings, the blind leading the blind? But cannot the infinite mind of God comprehend the finite mind of man? Does not the Creator understand the wants of the created? Does God require of man more than he can perform? No! How then is he to make man know what he requires of him? By adapting himself to the finite mind so that it can comprehend the plan of salvation. If the Word of God was to be incomprehensible, why was it given? What better are mankind for it? But no; it was given as a light to our feet and a guide to salvation, as a rule and guide to our faith and practice, and not as a mystery which we cannot comprehend. Then to whom was it given? To the ministry, that they alone might comprehend it? No! But to all men, "that they might know the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Jno. 17: 7. If they refuse to know him, then is their condition wretched indeed. But how are they to know him? Not by the promptings of their own minds, "for the carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." It does not, neither can it, harmonize with God, so long as it is depended on to furnish the way to life. I hold this truth to be self-evident, (I speak to the professing christian) that the Word of God is true, and if true, will harmonize with itself—that the reason of man is fallible, subject to err, therefore cannot be depended on. That if the Word of God is true, it has always been true, and will always remain true. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." That human reason is fallible, has erred and will err. That the Word of God being true, it is our duty to accept it in preference to any human creeds, however much it is claimed they are taken from or based upon the Scriptures. The Scriptures themselves form a creed established by the infallible Word of God and are not subject to error. "Ye shall not add unto the word I command you, neither shall you diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you." Deut. 4: 2. "What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto nor diminish therefrom." Deut. 12: 32. Read also the awful threatenings contained in Rev. 21: 18, 19. But are the Scriptures a sealed book? What says St. John in Rev. 1: 3?—"Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things that are written therein, for the time is at hand." Now, how can they keep those things, if they understand them not; and how can they understand them if they are sealed? But they are not sealed. Rev. 22: 10.—"And he saith unto me, seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book, for the time is at hand." Well, what are these things referred to in Rev. 1: 3? Let the Scripture explain itself; it is its best expositor. Read the first verse of the first chapter of Revelations. "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which GOD GAVE UNTO HIM, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass. And he sent and signified it (the revelation made by God, &c.) by his angel, unto his servant John." What then is a revelation? It is a making known or disclosing of things not known before; appropriately, the sacred truths communicated (made known) to man for his instruction and direction. Then we can understand why they are blessed who "keep those things that are written therein." First, Because it is the express Revelation of Jesus Christ. Second, These sayings are not sealed. Third, They are given for instruction and direction, not to one or two, but to all "his servants." Yet in the face and eyes of these truths, we hear ministers, professed servants of the Most High, declare from the pulpit that there are things in the Bible not intended for man to understand. In other words, virtually charging God with folly and inconsistency in giving the Scriptures to men, as a rule and guide, by which he shall be judged, and at the same time intending that he should not understand them—and, notwithstanding, they have before them continually, in 2 Tim. 3; 15, 16, 17, "And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. ALL SCRIPTURE is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

There is an individual responsibility resting upon each one—a responsibility they cannot evade by trusting in the doctrines taught by men. "Jesus saith unto him, I am the Way, the Truth and the Life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me." John 14: 6. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." John 5: 39.

Pulling Teeth.

It is like pulling a tooth to get a farthing from some close-fisted, money-loving Achans. You must pull, and pull, and pull. They groan, and twist, and turn, and screw, and squirm—make a thousand apologies and wry faces the moment we solicit aid for some benevolent purpose. It is like plucking out a right eye for them to put their hands into their pockets and take out a sixpence! O, what covetousness in the church! Will not this one species of idolatry lead more souls to the pit than all others? Thousands on thousands of religious professors are starving their souls to death—are mere skeletons in spirituality, on account of this grasping, hoarding, money-loving disposition! "O man of God, flee these things!"—Golden Rule.

☞ No man is more miserable than he that hath no adversity; that man is not tried whether he be good or bad; and God never crowns those virtues which are only faculties and dispositions; but every act of virtue is an ingredient into reward—God so dresses us for heaven.—Jeremy Taylor.

☞ Those who pursue the stream of truth to its sources have much climbing to do, much fatigue to encounter; but they see great sights.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

"CURSED IS THE GROUND FOR THY SAKE."

'Twas mercy alone that brought this doom
On earth, and spoke for lost Adam's tomb;
'Twas love divine to fallen men,
That shadowed the earth in darkness then.

Man fell from his high and pure estate,
And earth must fall, the creature to mate;—
The food of angels, the food of men,
Must change to the meat of infants. then

In sweat, in grief, in blood and tears,
Man toiled for life thro' dying years;
But at last the "fruit of sin" did yield
The tyrant Death, o'er earth's wide field.

We hail the day that comes again,
When God shall "walk" with testing men;
The Lord will restore things by degree;—
This is the first lost, and found first will be.

O earth! thou shalt bloom in beauty all bright,
A halo wraps round thee of purified light;
No tears, no groans, no sighs, no pains,
But all is bliss when thy Savior dear reigns.

Then man shall arise to commune with his God,
And flowers shall spring up where Adam first trod;
The "curse" passes far from men, and earth,
Restored, gives primeval beauty birth.

Thirst.

Of the many illustrations which are found in the Scriptures to denote the perishing soul, conscious of its peril, and longing for salvation, there is none so terribly expressive as thirst.

It requires a person to have once felt the burning pangs which follow the entire lack of water, to fully understand what the inspired Psalmist would convey, when he speaks of his yearnings after God, as the deer, pressed by the hunter, panteth for the cooling streams. We have often read of the extremities to which caravans have been reduced, while crossing the sandy ocean of the desert waste. Every particle of the moisture in their bodies evaporated betwixt the sand under foot, hot as the floor of an oven, and the pitiless blaze of a vertical suns. No cooling breeze sweep gratefully across their throbbing brows; but the suffocating sirocco, like the volcanoe's breath, parches their heated and bleeding lips, and fills their aching eyes, nostrils and burning throat, with a shower of scorching dust. And if their fainting steps do not soon reach the saving shade of the Oasis, a cloud of gorged vultures, and heaps of whitening bones, are all that remain to show where last the travelers fell and perished.

This I have read of; but I have felt the agony of thirst at sea. I well remember that protracted voyage, when a succession of long listless calms, more to be dreaded than the most tempestuous hurricane that ever howled across the deep, left us for many weeks motionless as a log, moved only on the bosom of that mighty mirror by the deep breathings of the ocean.

Day by day the scanty allowance was diminished, till at length the few drops of putrid water failed to moisten our lips. Even this poor comfort was exhausted. Above, the sun, like a huge lens hung in the cloudless sky, pouring his fierce rays down upon our deck, making the boiling pitch run from the seams, and the melted tar from the standing rigging. You could not touch an iron belaying-pin with the naked hand; and I do not believe but that a beefsteak could have been cooked upon the fluke of the anchor. Provisions and liquors we had enough; but happy were those who did not touch the latter, as the fiery draught but added to their consuming thirst. The collapsed sails lay flat against the mast or hung listless and wrinkled from the stays; and the men sought shelter from the heat under the awnings, and endeavored to court an hour's unconscious repose from their sufferings. Two pigs that ran about the deck, and the few chickens in the hen-coop were slaughtered, entirely for their blood, as a means of allaying our thirst. I used to chew a pistol bullet, as did others, and found considerable relief thereby; but the fearful drought consumed us, and there was no remedy.

Our captain did all in his power by a cheerful example to keep up the spirits of the crew. He told them that doubtless a breeze would spring up to-night, or that he knew by an old wound he had, that rain was not far off. But the morrow came and went, and the old wound sank in their esteem as a faithful prognosticator. We all appreciated the motives of the brave old man, but his words at length failed to give us the consolation which he intended.

We were often called to hear prayers read, and the men, for the want of something else to do, would listen for awhile quietly; but soon some of the poor fellows, less patient than the rest, would jump up, and running out, throw themselves with a groan or howl of despair upon the burning deck. The spirit-room had been invaded more than once, which produced such disastrous results, that armed sentries were placed to guard it. Three perished. One, by imbibing ardent spirits, was attacked with mania a potu, and jumped overboard, as did another who sought relief by drinking salt water. The third, a delicate youth, son of one of the owners, sank from exhaustion, and expired in the captain's arms on the fifth day.

Words would fail to express an hundredth part of our misery during that long, long season of suffering; or portray the haggard looks, wild eyes in which gleamed the fire of latent insanity, the tightened skin, like parchment clinging to the aching bones, whilst the tongue rattled in the scorched mouth like a piece of half-burned leather. From every lip on board that vessel arose many a prayer to the heavens for the speedy release, even by death, from their agony.

"For wind and rain the wild one prayed who never prayed before,
And when they came not at his call, he bit his lips and swore!"

Our dreams were most tantalizing. Green fields and sparkling rivulets were constantly present to our uneasy slumbers. Flocks would be seen drinking, and wading through the clear river; but when we would rush to throw ourselves into the limpid waters, some opposing fiend would thrust us back; or, as perchance we stooped, like Tantalus, to slake our thirst, they would recede, and leave us to despair. O! how we thought of many instances where we lavished the precious element in needless waste; and prayed like so many raging Diveses for a drop of water to cool our tongues in this floating hell! My frame still shudders when I think of it. To see the gnawing, burning death advancing with slow but certain step, his black wings shadowing his approach, and yet no loophole for the victims to escape the lingering fate, unless the forbidden egress of self-murder, which all brave minds abhor.

My own strength was entirely gone, yet there remained an inward assurance that I would not yet be called upon to die. This confidence was shared by another of the crew, who was called "parson Dick," from his staid habits and religious conversation. This man was now the strongest one on board, and often administered comfort to his shipmates by his pious words and acts of kindness. He frequently dipped a piece of canvas in the sea, and after wringing, laid it upon the brows and wrists of his fainting companions. This rendered their sufferings less unendurable by imparting a little moisture to their exhausted bodies, and was the means of saving many.

I was lying close under the port bulwarks, shaded by the awning which stretched as far forward on our flush deck as the after hatch. The "parson" was bathing my temples, and speaking words of comfort. He asked me if I were afraid to die? I attempted to speak, but my tied up tongue refused to articulate, and I shook my head.

"Poor fellow! how weak you are!" he said, compassionately. "But cheer, my hearties," he added, that all might hear; "for my faith is stronger than ever Peter's was, that ere this time to-morrow we'll have as much wind as ever we can stagger under, and RAIN, my lads, as it only knows how to rain in these latitudes!"

Many who heard him, knew little about Peter or Peter's faith; but there was something so cheering and confident in the words of Dick, that the poor tars brightened up, and one of them proposed a cheer for the parson. The abortive effort was so dreadfully ludicrous, that the laugh which followed was much stronger than the cheer.

Hope was revived and the men trod firmer. The captain partook of the renewed confidence, and called all hands to prayer. The order, or rather the request, was obeyed with cheerfulness, when one of the sailors sung out, "Let us have a prayer from the parson." The motion was carried, and Dick took the lead. That was a sight worth seeing, and a prayer worth hearing. Timid at first, the pleader gained strength and confidence. Hark! is that a sob? it is, from the hardest heart on board! The language, though rugged, was grand as the cloud-piercing mountain top, as the speaker placed faith's scaling ladder to the heights, and stormed the battlements of heaven!

"See the brave tars all weak,
While down each veteran's cheek
Run tears the briny deep
Never knew before!"

As yet the prayer sounded in mine ear, I fell asleep. I dreamed of hope and happiness, and pleasant fields, and rushing waters. Methought I stooped to drink, and this time the precious fluid did not mock me. I felt the cool blessing bathe my lips. I heard the rush of the cataract, which sound awoke me, and Dick was wetting my mouth with water. It was fresh! Every thing had changed. The ship was flying before the wind, the rain fell in deluges, and filled every vessel which was set to catch it. Elijah's God had heard our prayers, and we were saved.

But a mightier salvation is provided for the sinner, who is perishing for lack of the waters of eternal life. Hear the hearty invitation—"Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk without money and without price."

From Bro. W. Sheldon.

Bro. Grant:—I am still in the gospel vineyard, "contending for the faith." Since my last letter to you, I have baptized four more in my own neighborhood. On the 5th of October I started on a tour to Wisconsin. Reached the residence of Bro. G. W. Barns, at Fairfield, on the 8th, where I remained long enough to preach twelve sermons to attentive hearers. Several in that place are almost ready to follow their Lord into the water. May they soon obey. Things appear ready for a work of grace. It was hard to bid them adieu, but duty called.

Next went to Strawberry Point, Iowa, to attend the Conference. At this meeting a vote was taken that three ministers be recommended as evangelists, to travel within the bounds of the conference. The only support which the conference could offer them was simply its recommendation. Isolated brethren, who are not acquainted with brethren in the ministry, have feared to write for aid, lest they might invite to their midst some one who might prove an injury instead of a benefit to the cause. This act will remove such fears. An account of the meeting will be sent to you by the President and Clerk.

I remained in the place several days after conference. On the last evening of my stay, a church of eleven or twelve members was organized in the place, with a fair prospect of additions. God bless them. Amen. W. Sheldon.

For the Crisis.

A Trip to Montreal.

In my bookish and heterodox travels, having come to Rouse's Point, and here lectured and canvassed with good success, I felt some encouragement to undertake, what I had already been a little ambitious of,—a petty conquest of Canada. I set out, accordingly, on the 29th ult., provided with a traveling companion,—Bro. D. T. Taylor; observing our Master's rule of "two and two;" and armed and equipped according to the law of the intended assault, with books, pamphlets, and parchments.

We arrived safely, having rendered "custom to whom custom was due" on our ammunition, thus paying our heartfelt respects to Her British and Gracious Majesty, the Queen. And on the cars, where I find it not well to be idle, I had the unequaled good fortune to dispose of four copies of my book; one to a prominent citizen of Montreal, and late honorable member of the Provincial Parliament. What was better, one of my four patrons conceived a lively interest in the book and its author, supposing me at first to be a Restorationist, and thought no worse of me when he found me to be infinitely short of that. He respected an independent man who could set people a thinking. He gave me the names of various persons to call upon with the book, and wished me all success in my novel enterprise.

We took a room at the St. Nicholas, hard by the Nelson Monument, and fell to work. My mode of attack is to get the names of clergymen, from the Directory, or otherwise, and of other book-reading men, upon whom I call at their houses or places of business. I sometimes give my name, at other times pass incog., but always put my book forward, as a better half, with its waiter, the "notices of the press," which I sometimes remark that I am a little proud of as the concessions of opponents. I avoid talk, and especially controversy; though I answer all questions as quietly and as frankly as I know how. This personal, hand to hand contest, is of course an "offensive" warfare; but as it is a seeking partly for the tender points of one's heart about the "eternity of evil," and partly for the mere, yet dear purse-strings, I must offend just as little as I possibly can. This whole art is best acquired by experience; but there is one excellent rule for the learning of it, and that is the Golden Rule. Suppose I were in an error, and thought I had the truth; in what way would I wish an opponent to try to sell me his own book?

Well, to go on with my story, I worked in this way most of the time for a week. On Sunday we rested, hearing in the morning an excellent discourse on the moral pre-requisites of communion, and in the evening an instructive sermon on the Theatre. We found no doctrinal friends, which phrase seems to be the meaning of the word "brethren." But we found christians, kind men, of liberal views, whom we should be proud of for brothers. On Monday I made arrangements for a lecture on Tuesday evening, hiring a hall and advertising in the papers and with a handbill. Bro. T. had now finished his business, helping me much, and returned.

I said we found no doctrinal friends. This is true in the plural. But in the singular, and not very singularly or without precedent, I found a clergyman of high standing and in a position for influence, who told me that from childhood he had felt the burden of the prevalent doctrine, and had lately come, by an independent investigation, to the same result with my own, as he understood it. He is not, however, publicly known as a dissenter, and I ought not, by giving his name, to commit him any further than he shall do so for himself. Be the result what it may, I felt sure that the Lord is touching the hearts of men with hopeful and trustful doubts about the perpetuity of evil things; and I would not exchange for a large sum, the joy with which I left my friend to settle more fully, if it may be, or need be, in the faith that trespassing and intruding evil will be dispossessed from the universe.

On Tuesday evening I lectured to about a hundred attentive listeners. This effort with the advertisement of it, I think gets some attention, for the next evening I understood that some reply would likely be made in the same hall. I did not learn by whom, but possibly by a gentleman I met, formerly of the "Plymouth Brethren" in England. Be this opposition what it may, if I said nothing untrue or unkind, it will help more than hinder.

As examples of my usual fortune, I met two ministers who took the book for their interest in the discussion; one who "had no idea he should ever agree with me," but was willing to see what was to be said on the other side. One Romanist layman bought the book, as a memento of a common friend. One lady, neither rich nor heterodox, took my book, saying she knew many friends who would read it with interest, and she would put them in the way of getting it. I had heard much of the bigotry of Montreal, but encountered very little of it. For aught I know, this little effort in Montreal is strictly pioneer work. The book was not before in the city, and its doctrine unheard of by more than is usual elsewhere. The present and pecuniary results of the expedition are as follows:

Dr. To expenses, including $5 for those of Lecture, $15.00.
Cr. By books sold, Debt and Grace, 42; Voice of the church, 3; other volumes, 7; and a few pamphlets; (profits above cost) about $20.00.
By hearers of my "testimony," $1.00.
By a word exchanged, perchance, with a "believer," and by all the hopes of a somewhat sanguine temperament, and all the prayers of all good people for increase granted to all truth planted and watered in Montreal and all places, (for "all things are yours," An untold sum.

So much pay in things argumentative and spiritual, and their perquisites. In things social and secular, there are friends made; and there was some sight seeing,—of lonely mountains looming up from the plains; of the beautiful cathedral, with the confused roaring of its bells, big and little, so like the noisy and clamorous step-mother church; and the Victoria Bridge across the St. Lawrence; a noble structure, that promises defiance to the vernal ice that severs the city for awhile from the rest of mankind.

Long live the Queen who gives it name; and longer yet the Christ who names all Christendom. May our names be found in the book of the life which He gives.

Home Missions.

For the two last years my mind has been pondering the propriety of making another effort to raise an interest in Maine, to devise a plan, and sustain one or two traveling ministers as missionaries, to labor in destitute places, and to occupy new fields now constantly inviting help, to preach the gospel of the kingdom, and labor to save souls. It is well known to some that we once made such an effort several years ago, with a good prospect, but failed by indiscretion. Some were discouraged, others thought the object not a good one. I have always thought otherwise. A well organized system of operation in this department would produce much more labor, and greater results in spreading the truth and benefiting men than our present hap-hazard labors. I should have introduced it at our State Conference in June last, had I not thought we had as much to attend to then as we could go through with.

My mind is stirred up to speak now to our brethren in Maine, and other States also, by reading the "Missionary report" of Bro. G. W. Burnham, and the "report of finance" of Bro. O. Wood, in the Advent Herald of Nov. 6. Probably some of you only gave it a passing notice, and some neglected to read it at all. Just turn to it again, and read it; you will see evidence enough in that report to convince you of the utility of such an arrangement. A similar course is being taken by our brethren in Illinois, with good results, as may be seen by their published reports. To employ a faithful man to travel and labor constantly in such places as may open for usefulness, untrammeled with pastoral cares, or the necessities of a family, adds much to the results of our work.

Many reasons might be argued for such a system, but I do not propose now to argue the case; I will, however, say that there are isolated brethren and sisters in many towns where they have no society with which to labor and worship with freedom and success, and who could do much to aid the cause in which we are engaged, by such a system. And such labor could be expended in some of their localities as to produce good societies of believers, who would stand ready for their returning Lord. There are means in the hands of some to do much. Some are now using all their energies to earn and lay by means for something. Perhaps they don't know for what. The Lord knows. I wish to ask such, How much do you love the cause? You see some brethren spending $10, some $25, some $50, some $100 or more, yearly, to advance the cause of truth you love so well. Do you do so? Some of you are as well able as they. You see the ministers spend all their time and property to preach the word, and you love to hear them. But do you bear their burdens? Are you better than they? Does God call them to spend all, and not call you to spend one tenth? Come, brethren, you who work for mammon, nearly all the time, let us make a rally to equalize the work. Get ready by our next annual gathering to enter into this work heartily.

If you, of whom I am now speaking, will do one-half as much as some are doing yearly, with no more means than you, $1000 could easily be raised to appropriate to systematic missionary work, and faithful men—gospel ministers—be found to use it to God's glory in laboring for the salvation of souls, who now have to spend much of the time to earn bread, while you are laying up money, or adding to your earthly substance. Come, just take these things into careful consideration. Look them full in the face. Ask yourself why you are making such an extensive outlay in building that great house, that costly barn, store, or adding to your lands. Ask the Lord to stir up your heart to love his truth more, to help you to do right with the "unrighteous mammon," to help you to deny self and enter upon his work as though you loved it. Jesus is coming soon. It will be too late to preach the gospel, to sacrifice for the good of the cause, to labor for sinners. What is done must be done quickly. That waste land, or other goods now doing no good, cannot be used then. O, come, let us rally to the work, and let us do what we can, that it may be said to us at last, "Well done."

Your brother still in the field,

I. C. Wellcome.

"Selah."—The Bibliotheca Sacra, in referring to the meaning of the Scriptural word "Selah," says that the Targums, and most of the Jewish commentators, give the word the meaning of eternally, forever. Rabbi Kimchi regards it as a sign to elevate the voice. The authors of the Septuagint translation appears to have regarded it as a musical or rythmical note. Herder regarded it as indicating a change of note; Matthewson as a musical note, equivalent, perhaps, to the word repeat. According to Luther and others, it means silence. Gesenius explains it to mean, "Let the instruments play and the singer stop." Wocher regards it as equivalent to the expression—"Up, my soul!" Sommer, after examining all the seventy-four passages in which the word occurs, recognizes in every case "an actual appeal or summons to Jehovah."

☞ Pity expresses itself in words—often relieves itself by a look. Charity asserts itself in gifts. A man may be full of pity, and yet extremely empty-handed.

☞ Our own happiness is best promoted by seeking the welfare of others.

"CURSED IS THE GROUND FOR THY SAKE."

'Twas mercy alone that brought this doom
On earth, and spoke for lost Adam's tomb;
'Twas love divine to fallen men,
That shadowed the earth in darkness then.

Man fell from his high and pure estate,
And earth must fall, the creature to mate;—
The food of angels, the food of men,
Must change to the meat of infants. then

In sweat, in grief, in blood and tears,
Man toiled for life thro' dying years;
But at last the "fruit of sin" did yield
The tyrant Death, o'er earth's wide field.

We hail the day that comes again,
When God shall "walk" with testing men;
The Lord will restore things by degree;—
This is the first lost, and found first will be.

O earth! thou shalt bloom in beauty all bright,
A halo wraps round thee of purified light;
No tears, no groans, no sighs, no pains,
But all is bliss when thy Savior dear reigns.

Then man shall arise to commune with his God,
And flowers shall spring up where Adam first trod;
The "curse" passes far from men, and earth,
Restored, gives primeval beauty birth.

Thirst.

Of the many illustrations which are found in the Scriptures to denote the perishing soul, conscious of its peril, and longing for salvation, there is none so terribly expressive as thirst.

It requires a person to have once felt the burning pangs which follow the entire lack of water, to fully understand what the inspired Psalmist would convey, when he speaks of his yearnings after God, as the deer, pressed by the hunter, panteth for the cooling streams. We have often read of the extremities to which caravans have been reduced, while crossing the sandy ocean of the desert waste. Every particle of the moisture in their bodies evaporated betwixt the sand under foot, hot as the floor of an oven, and the pitiless blaze of a vertical suns. No cooling breeze sweep gratefully across their throbbing brows; but the suffocating sirocco, like the volcanoe's breath, parches their heated and bleeding lips, and fills their aching eyes, nostrils and burning throat, with a shower of scorching dust. And if their fainting steps do not soon reach the saving shade of the Oasis, a cloud of gorged vultures, and heaps of whitening bones, are all that remain to show where last the travelers fell and perished.

This I have read of; but I have felt the agony of thirst at sea. I well remember that protracted voyage, when a succession of long listless calms, more to be dreaded than the most tempestuous hurricane that ever howled across the deep, left us for many weeks motionless as a log, moved only on the bosom of that mighty mirror by the deep breathings of the ocean.

Day by day the scanty allowance was diminished, till at length the few drops of putrid water failed to moisten our lips. Even this poor comfort was exhausted. Above, the sun, like a huge lens hung in the cloudless sky, pouring his fierce rays down upon our deck, making the boiling pitch run from the seams, and the melted tar from the standing rigging. You could not touch an iron belaying-pin with the naked hand; and I do not believe but that a beefsteak could have been cooked upon the fluke of the anchor. Provisions and liquors we had enough; but happy were those who did not touch the latter, as the fiery draught but added to their consuming thirst. The collapsed sails lay flat against the mast or hung listless and wrinkled from the stays; and the men sought shelter from the heat under the awnings, and endeavored to court an hour's unconscious repose from their sufferings. Two pigs that ran about the deck, and the few chickens in the hen-coop were slaughtered, entirely for their blood, as a means of allaying our thirst. I used to chew a pistol bullet, as did others, and found considerable relief thereby; but the fearful drought consumed us, and there was no remedy.

Our captain did all in his power by a cheerful example to keep up the spirits of the crew. He told them that doubtless a breeze would spring up to-night, or that he knew by an old wound he had, that rain was not far off. But the morrow came and went, and the old wound sank in their esteem as a faithful prognosticator. We all appreciated the motives of the brave old man, but his words at length failed to give us the consolation which he intended.

We were often called to hear prayers read, and the men, for the want of something else to do, would listen for awhile quietly; but soon some of the poor fellows, less patient than the rest, would jump up, and running out, throw themselves with a groan or howl of despair upon the burning deck. The spirit-room had been invaded more than once, which produced such disastrous results, that armed sentries were placed to guard it. Three perished. One, by imbibing ardent spirits, was attacked with mania a potu, and jumped overboard, as did another who sought relief by drinking salt water. The third, a delicate youth, son of one of the owners, sank from exhaustion, and expired in the captain's arms on the fifth day.

Words would fail to express an hundredth part of our misery during that long, long season of suffering; or portray the haggard looks, wild eyes in which gleamed the fire of latent insanity, the tightened skin, like parchment clinging to the aching bones, whilst the tongue rattled in the scorched mouth like a piece of half-burned leather. From every lip on board that vessel arose many a prayer to the heavens for the speedy release, even by death, from their agony.

"For wind and rain the wild one prayed who never prayed before,
And when they came not at his call, he bit his lips and swore!"

Our dreams were most tantalizing. Green fields and sparkling rivulets were constantly present to our uneasy slumbers. Flocks would be seen drinking, and wading through the clear river; but when we would rush to throw ourselves into the limpid waters, some opposing fiend would thrust us back; or, as perchance we stooped, like Tantalus, to slake our thirst, they would recede, and leave us to despair. O! how we thought of many instances where we lavished the precious element in needless waste; and prayed like so many raging Diveses for a drop of water to cool our tongues in this floating hell! My frame still shudders when I think of it. To see the gnawing, burning death advancing with slow but certain step, his black wings shadowing his approach, and yet no loophole for the victims to escape the lingering fate, unless the forbidden egress of self-murder, which all brave minds abhor.

My own strength was entirely gone, yet there remained an inward assurance that I would not yet be called upon to die. This confidence was shared by another of the crew, who was called "parson Dick," from his staid habits and religious conversation. This man was now the strongest one on board, and often administered comfort to his shipmates by his pious words and acts of kindness. He frequently dipped a piece of canvas in the sea, and after wringing, laid it upon the brows and wrists of his fainting companions. This rendered their sufferings less unendurable by imparting a little moisture to their exhausted bodies, and was the means of saving many.

I was lying close under the port bulwarks, shaded by the awning which stretched as far forward on our flush deck as the after hatch. The "parson" was bathing my temples, and speaking words of comfort. He asked me if I were afraid to die? I attempted to speak, but my tied up tongue refused to articulate, and I shook my head.

"Poor fellow! how weak you are!" he said, compassionately. "But cheer, my hearties," he added, that all might hear; "for my faith is stronger than ever Peter's was, that ere this time to-morrow we'll have as much wind as ever we can stagger under, and RAIN, my lads, as it only knows how to rain in these latitudes!"

Many who heard him, knew little about Peter or Peter's faith; but there was something so cheering and confident in the words of Dick, that the poor tars brightened up, and one of them proposed a cheer for the parson. The abortive effort was so dreadfully ludicrous, that the laugh which followed was much stronger than the cheer.

Hope was revived and the men trod firmer. The captain partook of the renewed confidence, and called all hands to prayer. The order, or rather the request, was obeyed with cheerfulness, when one of the sailors sung out, "Let us have a prayer from the parson." The motion was carried, and Dick took the lead. That was a sight worth seeing, and a prayer worth hearing. Timid at first, the pleader gained strength and confidence. Hark! is that a sob? it is, from the hardest heart on board! It is well known to some that we once made such an effort several years ago, with a good prospect, but failed by indiscretion. Some were discouraged, others thought the object not a good one. I have always thought otherwise. A well organized system of operation in this department would produce much more labor, and greater results in spreading the truth and benefiting men than our present hap-hazard labors. I should have introduced it at our State Conference in June last, had I not thought we had as much to attend to then as we could go through with.

My mind is stirred up to speak now to our brethren in Maine, and other States also, by reading the "Missionary report" of Bro. G. W. Burnham, and the "report of finance" of Bro. O. Wood, in the Advent Herald of Nov. 6. Probably some of you only gave it a passing notice, and some neglected to read it at all. Just turn to it again, and read it; you will see evidence enough in that report to convince you of the utility of such an arrangement. A similar course is being taken by our brethren in Illinois, with good results, as may be seen by their published reports. To employ a faithful man to travel and labor constantly in such places as may open for usefulness, untrammeled with pastoral cares, or the necessities of a family, adds much to the results of our work.

Many reasons might be argued for such a system, but I do not propose now to argue the case; I will, however, say that there are isolated brethren and sisters in many towns where they have no society with which to labor and worship with freedom and success, and who could do much to aid the cause in which we are engaged, by such a system. And such labor could be expended in some of their localities as to produce good societies of believers, who would stand ready for their returning Lord. There are means in the hands of some to do much. Some are now using all their energies to earn and lay by means for something. Perhaps they don't know for what. The Lord knows. I wish to ask such, How much do you love the cause? You see some brethren spending $10, some $25, some $50, some $100 or more, yearly, to advance the cause of truth you love so well. Do you do so? Some of you are as well able as they. You see the ministers spend all their time and property to preach the word, and you love to hear them. But do you bear their burdens? Are you better than they? Does God call them to spend all, and not call you to spend one tenth? Come, brethren, you who work for mammon, nearly all the time, let us make a rally to equalize the work. Get ready by our next annual gathering to enter into this work heartily.

If you, of whom I am now speaking, will do one-half as much as some are doing yearly, with no more means than you, $1000 could easily be raised to appropriate to systematic missionary work, and faithful men—gospel ministers—be found to use it to God's glory in laboring for the salvation of souls, who now have to spend much of the time to earn bread, while you are laying up money, or adding to your earthly substance. Come, just take these things into careful consideration. Look them full in the face. Ask yourself why you are making such an extensive outlay in building that great house, that costly barn, store, or adding to your lands. Ask the Lord to stir up your heart to love his truth more, to help you to do right with the "unrighteous mammon," to help you to deny self and enter upon his work as though you loved it. Jesus is coming soon. It will be too late to preach the gospel, to sacrifice for the good of the cause, to labor for sinners. What is done must be done quickly. That waste land, or other goods now doing no good, cannot be used then. O, come, let us rally to the work, and let us do what we can, that it may be said to us at last, "Well done."

Your brother still in the field,

"Selah."—The Bibliotheca Sacra, in referring to the meaning of the Scriptural word "Selah," says that the Targums, and most of the Jewish commentators, give the word the meaning of eternally, forever. Rabbi Kimchi regards it as a sign to elevate the voice. The authors of the Septuagint translation appears to have regarded it as a musical or rythmical note. Hender regarded it as indicating a change of note; Matthewson as a musical note, equivalent, perhaps, to the word repeat. According to Luther and others, it means silence. Gesenius explains it to mean, "Let the instruments play and the singer stop." Wocher regards it as equivalent to the expression—"Up, my soul!" Summer, after examining all the seventy-four passages in which the word occurs, recognizes in every case "an actual appeal or summons to Jehovah."

☞ Pity expresses itself in words—often relieves itself by a look. Charity asserts itself in gifts. A man may be full of pity, and yet extremely empty-handed.

The Bible.

A MORAL SUN.

The Bible is to the moral world what the sun is to the natural:—put out the sun from the firmament, and all the stars of light withdraw their shining, and the world is reduced to chaos and darkness as at the beginning. Put away the Bible from our world, and the dark pall of moral night would settle down upon us without one glimmering ray of light to guide and cheer us in this world, or illuminate the future with hope.

A MORAL LAMP AND LIGHT.

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet,
And a light unto my path."—Ps. 119: 105.

A lamp, or light, is used in the dark night when neither sun, moon, or stars appear. The word of God gives us light in this dark night of the world: for now is the night of the world, as says the Apostle, "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." Other lights there are which men substitute for the word, such as the light of human reason;—the revelations of demoniacal spirits,—and trance mediums,&c. But they are sparks of their own kindling, of whom the Lord says,—"Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks: walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled. This shall ye have of mine hand; ye shall lie down in sorrow." And of whom the Lord thus warns his people: "And when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead? to the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." These lights are as the scintillations of the smitten flint; or of the ignus fatui,—or of the lightning bug in the dark night, which reveal the greater darkness and leave the men who would follow them to stumble and fall in the pit-falls of error and ruin forever!

The wisest of men, and of heathen philosophers, who have groped their way in moral darkness, without the light of revelation, have most of them thus fallen. Socrates, the wisest and best of all heathen philosophers, who, without divine revelation, endeavored to study Deity, man's present and future, when condemned by his judges to drink the fatal poison, thus addressed them: "I go to death, you to life, but that which will be for the best Divinity only knows." How dark the present and future respecting "life and immortality," only "brought to light in the gospel," throughout the ages, was this struggling mind. Compare this language with that of another walking in the light of revelation.

"Thou wilt show me the path of life:
In thy presence is fullness of joy:
At thy right hand pleasures forevermore."
"As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness:
I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness."

Items of Travel.

Bro. Grant:—I told you in one of my former articles I would give those items of my travels that I deem of interest to your readers. I will pen a few this morning. I am some 150 miles south of my home. This is not a large town, although it is a favorable point, lying at the junction of Illinois and Mississippi river, fifteen miles above Alton. For some cause, it has not grown like many of our Western villages. I arrived here last evening, 10 o'clock, on boat, in company with Bro. Lewis, formerly of New York, who has been residing in this vicinity some two years. He was at our tent meeting in Brown, Co., of which I will soon speak. He has not been idle since he came West. By talking, holding meetings, lending books, a few families have embraced the truth, and by their urgent request, I came here to hold a series of meetings. We came direct from our interesting tent meeting. Stopped, however, and gave them one discourse in Ripley, to a very attentive congregation, on the "necessity of a divine revelation." Hope good may result. Stopped with Bro. Randal over night. Their son was sick with the miserable ague. I loathe the disease. Had a pleasant interview with his family, and was kindly entertained.

Tuesday morning Bro. R. took us to Lagrange, on the Illinois river, some twelve miles. Was in hopes to get a boat that afternoon. No boat came. Another man was there waiting; hence we concluded that one had better watch for a boat and the other retire. Being very much worn out, I laid down in hopes of getting some rest, but my hope was not a good one. No sooner had I laid down, than the extra large musquitos commenced bleeding me. I covered up well, although quite uncomfortable, it being warm, with the intention of their defeat; but it was no use; they were too large, their probosciscs too long; they bled me still. Not being favorable to the system of blood-letting, I waged war for a while and gave it up. Arose, and preferred watching to being stung and bled at that rate.

Fortunately a boat came about 3 1-2 o'clock, and we put off. After stopping nearly ten hours to take on some 3500 bushel of wheat, we came on slowly (say six and a half miles per hour,) the boat being heavily ladened—guards level with the water—but arrived safe, for which we felt thankful to God.

I have given out and posted notices for preaching this evening. I perceive one serious objection to our success here. There is no convenient house that can be had. May the Lord open the way.

I am stopping with one of the Abrahamic family, by the name of Abraham Brown—a good pilgrim's home—a son by name as well as by faith. More anon.

"The Word of God."

The christian world has been taught that "the word of God" was the Messiah—"the eternal Son" in his spiritual personality, as he often appeared to the patriarchs and prophets. Dr. Adam Clark says that "The word was no subordinate being; no second to the Most High, but the Supreme, Eternal Jehovah."

"The word was with God." John 1: 1–2. Twice this is asserted as an essential part of the truth here revealed. It is the Word of God. That is, the Word from God—originating "with God."

The phrase oft occurs in the Old Testament in such relations as to forbid the idea that Christ was thus personated. See Jer. 1: 2, 4–11; Ezek. 1: 3. "The word of the Lord came" to Jeremiah, and Ezekiel and others; and the context teaches plainly that the idea is expressed in appropriate terms. The Lord spoke by them; and "the word of God" is "that which is written for our learning." But seeing that "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy"—that the spirit and true interest of prophecy is to reveal Jesus—we find the term "Logos" (Word) applied to our Lord. He is the sum of the word; nay, he is the impersonation of the word. "The Word (not Jesus) was made flesh;" and this was Jesus. John 1: 1–14; Rev. 19: 13.

The New Testament use of this phrase, as it was generally used in the Old, proves positively the folly of the popular opinion. It is Papal pollution.

"Now in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberias Cæsar, Annas and Caiaphas being high priests, 'the word of God' came unto John; and he (John) came preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Luke 3: 2–6. This, then, is usually "the word" that John preached, that the prophets spoke and wrote, and that we daily read in Holy Scriptures. Save in a few plain instances, the word of God is the truth of God, as it came to John, and was preached to the people.

Treatise on Matt. 24th and 25th Chapters.

I wish to say to the brethren who are interested in this work, that before I published it I had been frequently solicited to write a work on those two chapters. I felt very incompetent for the task, but finally wrote and published it. The first edition sold much sooner than I expected. It was stereotyped, and I published a second edition with much hesitation, because I had no money to waste. That has sold, and more are called for, and although it is not all that I wish it was, yet I have hundreds of testimonies of its good influence in leading into truth. I think it should be circulated by thousands, and if brethren will interest themselves to sell it, I will get out a third edition soon. It is a neatly bound work of 150 pages, containing more type than some of our one dollar books, and yet sells for 33 cts.

The Soul.—No. 5.

We have now examined the first nine texts in the Bible where the word nephesh (soul) occurs, and have found no proof that it represents any thing immortal; but it is clearly shown that it applies to beasts as truly as to men, and means the same in both applications;—in its primary sense, the whole being; and secondarily, the life of each. From our present examination, we must conclude that man and beast are made of the same material—dust—and die alike.

The Septuagint of Eccl. 3: 19–21, reads: "As is the death of the one so also the death of the other; and there is one breath to all; and what the man more than the beast? nothing; for all is vanity. All go to one place; all were formed of the dust, and all will return to dust. And who has seen the spirit (not spirits) of the sons of man, whether it (not they) goes upward? and the spirit of the beast whether it goeth downward to the earth?"

Solomon is moved to write against the false philosophy of his days; which was, that when a bad man died, his soul went down among the beasts for punishment, and at the end of three thousand years was permitted to enter the body of a man again; but good souls ascended higher at death. Solomon meets these philosophers by saying, that men and beasts die alike, and all go to one place;—"all were formed of the dust, and all will return to dust;" not, some go into beasts and others become gods.

Herodotus, the oldest historian whose writings are preserved, says:—"The Egyptians say that Ceres (the goddess of corn) and Bacchus (the god of wine) hold the chief sway in the infernal regions; and the Egyptians also were the first who asserted the doctrine that the soul of man is immortal." Herod., p. 144.

We have now found the origin of the doctrine. Are we prepared to adopt their doctrine about the infernal regions of Ceres and Bacchus? We may do so with as much propriety as we can receive from them the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. It is very singular that the Egyptian heathen found that the soul was immortal before it was revealed to the Hebrews, God's peculiar people; who, by the way, never did learn any such doctrine from their Scriptures, but when they did receive it, they adopted the belief from the heathen.

Gibbon very truly remarks, "The doctrine of the immortality of the soul is omitted in the law of Moses." Gib. v. 1, p. 530–1. Twenty five hundred years had passed when Moses wrote, but God had no where taught his children that the soul, or any part of man, was immortal. Satan had taught such a doctrine to our first parents. Job, a cotemporary with Moses, shows most clearly in his writings that he believed the whole man dies and remains dead till the resurrection. See Job 14: 10–14.

"But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep. O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, (sheol) that thou wouldest keep me secret until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time, and remember me. If a man die shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come."

In the Bishop's Bible, the tenth verse reads: "But as for man when he is dead, perished and consumed away, what becometh of him?"

Why is the Bible silent on the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, if it is truth? It seems clear that it is a heathen dogma; and shall we believe heathen philosophers? or God and the sacred Scriptures?

When contrasting a tree cut down with a man who has died, the Septuagint of Job 14: 10–12 reads, "But a man that has died is utterly gone; and when a mortal is fallen, he is no more. For the sea wastes in length of time, and a river fails and is dried up. And a man that has lain down in death shall certainly not rise again till the heaven be dissolved, and they shall not awake from their sleep."

A True Request.

"Lead us not into temptation."

This petition is a special one. It relates to two objects, temptation and evil. A desire is expressed, on one hand, to be freed from temptation, and on the other, to be exempted from evil.

There has been much dispute in the world with regard to the source of temptation. And, perhaps, the three following positions may include all that has been said on the subject.

1st. It is held that all temptation comes from God. In support of this position we are referred to Gen. 22: 1. "And it came to pass that God did tempt Abraham." Again, "I am the Lord, and there is none else, there is no God beside me: . . . I form light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things. Isa. 45: 5, 7.

These passages are urged upon our consideration as sustaining the above proposition. It is contended, that as God knows all things from the beginning, that he does, in a sense, direct, control and appropriate the events and circumstances that make up human history. That, though he does not in every case absolutely project events, he does permit them to transpire, with the knowledge of their results, in all of their minute development connected with human history. And, that inasmuch as he sees the end from the beginning, together with all the affairs that transpire between the two extreme points of man's history, involving all the moral evil connected with the dark meanderings of suffering humanity; that he does, in a sense, afflict the human race, and is answerable for the results.

2d. That God does not tempt men, but that all temptation is the work of Satan. Paul exhorted his brethren, on one occasion, to give themselves to fasting, "that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency." 1 Cor. 7: 5. Again. "And Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost returned from Jordan, and was led by the Spirit into the wilderness, being tempted forty days of the Devil."

In the foregoing passages, Satan is represented as an active agent. He is artful, insinuating, or suggesting to the human mind, and by these means, gaining the affections; or on the other hand, overshadowing the mind with calamity, and deterring from duty by imaginary evils. That it was Satan or the serpent that deceived the first pair of earth, and succeeded in drawing them from their allegiance to God, and was thus instrumental in bringing upon the world a flood of moral and physical evil. That, not content with his first success, he has, as he still does, walked up and down the earth "seeking whom he may devour." And as if earth was not a sufficient area in which to carry out his designs, he is represented as having control of the region above the earth—is the "Prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." That he is the source and cause of all evil in the universe; that death, moral and physical, resulted from his efforts, and that in order to the complete eradication of all that is calamitous or distressing, Christ took upon himself the seed of Abraham, "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the Devil: and deliver them who through fear of death were all their life time subject to bondage."

3d. That man is tempted of his own lusts. This position is sustained more particularly by the apostle's remark: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lusts, and enticed."

The above passage settles the fact that "God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth any man." That he permits men to be tempted, there can be no doubt. He permitted Adam, Noah, Peter and Paul to be tempted. Adam and Peter fell; Noah and Paul held fast their integrity.

The word temptation sometimes signifies trial, affliction, anything that tests our character. God tries men to prove their faith and obedience. This was done when Moses was called to leave the court of Pharaoh; when Abraham was commanded to forsake the land of his nativity. God tried Hezekiah by afflictions; also, the patriarch Job. He tried the Israelites, by deferring their hopes, assuring them that they should wander in the wilderness forty years.

But leaving this part of the subject, we may remark, that it is perfectly right for us to desire exemption from the trials and temptations of life, otherwise we should not have been taught thus to pray. We have the example of the Savior. "Let this cup pass from me." We are encouraged to this course by the example of the primitive saints. And last, but not least, the assurance of being heard or meeting with success. "Call on me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me."

How comforting the thought, that, in all times of distress, God is willing to hear us pray, and grant us relief. None but a real christian can appreciate this heaven-purchased blessing. Friends may forsake, trials press sore upon us, yet, Heaven's ear is always open. How this glorious fact should influence us in "praying without ceasing," and thus improving upon this glorious privilege. Do we realize that "the kingdom, the power and the glory" are the Lord's? This is the consideration, "Lead us not into temptation . . . for thine is the kingdom," &c. All blessings come from the Father of lights. He is the author of all good. To confide, to trust in Him, is both a privilege and a duty. He is our Father and cares for us. He has given us the pledge of endless good, while all heaven, angels, and the saints of past ages, assure us of success.

The Discussion between Dr. J. Litch and the editor is now filed among the records of the past. A large and attentive audience, including several clergymen, listened with interest to the discussion; and at the close proposed, and expressed by a rising vote, their approbation of the kind manner in which the disputants conducted the debate. At the close of the third evening an intelligent gentleman remarked to the writer with deep feeling, "You have done me some good." In what way? we inquired. He replied, "You have made me believe the Bible." We think much good will result from this discussion. As we have a verbatim report, given by Mr. Yerrington, who was employed for this object, which will soon be published in pamphlet form, we will not remark further at this time. Let those who wish for copies of the discussion send their orders, and we hope to fill them soon. It should be widely scattered through the country. It is well known that Dr. Litch is considered the champion on the affirmative of the question.

☞ The new Tract, entitled "What is Man? A Bible View of his Creation. The meaning of Soul, Spirit, Death and Hell," is now ready for delivery. Price 5 cts. single, postage 1 ct; $3.00 per hundred. This tract weighs just one ounce; and those taking eight or more, will save half the postage, as a parcel weighing more than eight ounces is charged but half a cent per ounce. Those ordering more than twenty five, and less than an hundred, will be allowed a reduction of 25 per ct. on the retail price.

Correction.—In our last article on the soul, the quotation from Prov. 12: 10, should read, "A righteous man regardeth the life (nephesh) of his beast," instead of "heart."

Water in the Sea.—If we would obtain any idea of the water which the sea contains, let us suppose a common and general depth of the ocean. By computing it at only two hundred fathoms, or the tenth part of a mile, we shall see that there is sufficient water to cover the whole globe to the height of five hundred and three feet; and if we were to reduce this to one mass, we should find that it would form a globe of more than sixty thousand miles in diameter.

☞ The river of God is full of water; but there is not one drop of it that takes its rise in earthly springs. God will have no strength used in his own battles but the strength which he himself imparts; and I would not have you in the least discouraged by it. Your emptiness is but the preparation for your being filled; and your casting down is but the making ready for your lifting up.—Spurgeon.

☞ When success makes a man better than he was before, he must be a good man indeed.

☞ There are many that despise half the world; but if there be any that despise the whole of it, it is because the other half despises them.

The essence of all moral goodness is love.

Ia. Minn. and Wis. Christian Conference.

Our second annual conference, bearing the above name, met at Strawberry Point, Ia., on Thursday, Oct. 21st, 1858, and was called to order by Eld. Peter S. W. Deyo, clerk of the preceding conference. Prayer by Elder W. Sheldon. Elder Samuel D. Deyo was selected as President of the meeting, and Elder Peter S. W. Deyo as clerk. By request of Eld. Yates Higgins, the conference consented to enlarge its bounds so as to include Wisconsin. By motion of Eld. W. Sheldon, the doors of the conference were thrown open for the reception of ministers and churches through their delegates.

The following ministers were received by the conference during its session, viz., Brn. Y. Higgins, G. W. Barnes, G. S. Teeple, S. D. Deyo, L. Lyons and A. Hubbel, also several churches from the three states over which the conference extends were duly received. After due deliberation, the conference thought it advisable to recommend a christian covenant upon which to organize churches within the limits of our conference, that we may act harmoniously in the gospel field.

CHURCH COVENANT.

1. Whereas the scriptures of truth style the followers of Christ christians,

Resolved, that we whose names are here appended will be known by this scriptural name, to the exclusion of all man-made and unscriptural names, agreeing to encourage each other in the way to the kingdom of heaven.

2. Whereas all scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness,

Resolved, that we accept the word of God as our rule of faith and practice, to the exclusion of human creeds.

3. Whereas the scriptures require us to receive him that is weak in the faith,

Resolved, that we make christian character our test of fellowship.

4. Whereas Christ has enjoined the ordinance of Baptism and the Lord's Supper upon his followers,

Resolved, that we will not neglect them.

5. Whereas the scriptures require the appointment of certain officers in the church,

Resolved, that we will preserve gospel order in this respect.

6. Whereas God prohibits our forsaking the assembling of ourselves together for Divine worship,

Resolved, that no excuse which we think God will not accept, shall prevent our assembling together for his worship.

By motion of Elder Y. Higgins that there be evangelists appointed, the following Brn. were appointed: Peter S. W. Deyo, Y. Higgins, William Sheldon.

Whereas the conference is not able to support its evangelists,

Resolved, that those that receive their labor compensate them.

Motion by Elder S. D. Deyo, that ministers who hereafter join this conference, bring a letter of commendation from the church.

Motion, that the evangelists appoint the place of the next annual conference.

Motion, that the minutes be published in the Crisis and Expositor.

Motion, to adjourn.

I would here say, for the encouragement of others, that we now number nine preachers.

OUR CONSTITUTION.

Whereas we believe that the cause of Christ demands harmony of action upon the part of ministers, therefore

Resolved, that we organize a conference to meet annually, composed of ministers and delegates from the churches, to devise means for the advancement of the cause of Christ.

Resolved, that the conference be called the Ia. Minn. and Wis. Christian Conference.

Resolved, that christian character shall be our test of fellowship and membership, and the Scriptures our only rule of faith and practice.

Resolved, that each annual meeting elect a president and scribe.

The meetings in connection with the conference were as follows: Wednesday, Oct. 20, prayer meeting. In the evening, Eld. W. Sheldon preached from Eph. 1: 14, showing that the spirit was the earnest of our inheritance; and what is the possession, &c. Thursday, 2 P. M., Bro. G. W. Barnes preached from Luke 12: 43, showing what was the meat in due season. In the evening, Eld. W. Sheldon on the seven seals, showing the successive fulfillment of them. Friday, 2 P. M., G. W. Barnes preached from Luke 16: 17, and Eld. Y. Higgins in the evening, from Rev. 10: 5, 6. Saturday evening, Eld. W. Sheldon preached from 1 Cor. 15: 22, 23. Showed the order of the resurrections. Sunday, at 10 A. M., Eld. S. Lyons preached from Heb. 2: 1. 2 P. M., Eld. Y. Higgins preached from Dan. 7: 27, and Eld. W. Sheldon in the evening. After which, the Lord's supper was administered. A few evenings following were occupied by Eld. W. Sheldon. His sermon Monday evening, on 1 Cor. 15: 50, plainly showed that there will be no mortals in the age to come. The last evening was on 2 Tim. 3: 16, and showed the efficacy of the Scriptures. The yearly feast was closed by organizing a church in this place. PETER S. W. DEYO, Clerk.

S. D. DEYO, President.
Strawberry Point, Nov. 1, 1858.

New Hampshire Conference,

HOLDEN AT LAKE VILLAGE, OCT. 7, 8, 9 AND 10, 1858.

According to previous notice, the conference convened at the chapel, Oct. 7th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and proceeded to business by the choice of Elders J. Knowles Moderator, T. M. Preble Clerk, and I. H. Shipman, assistant. After prayer, Elder J. V. Himes of the Mass. conference being present, was invited to take part in the deliberations of the conference. After some remarks by Brn. Morse, Himes, Preble, Shipman, Knowles, Locke and Thompson, upon the subject of a more permanent organization of the conference, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to prepare a plan for the more perfect organization of this conference, and report at this session.

The following persons were chosen said committee:—T. M. Preble, I. H. Shipman, J. Morse, J. V. Himes, John Aldrich.

The following resolution was then introduced, and after some remarks, adopted.

Resolved, that a committee of three be appointed to inquire into the condition and number of Sabbath schools within the bounds of this conference. And also suggest any improvement they may deem proper for their greater prosperity. And report at this session.

Brn. appointed on said committee, were E. Davis, J. Morse, Wm. H. Eastman.

On motion, agreed that Brn. I. H. Shipman, B. Locke and F. Davis be a committee to prepare the general business to come before this conference.—Conference then adjourned till 10 o'clock to-morrow A. M. Preaching in the evening by Elder J. V. Himes. Text, Mark 1: 35—39. This was a discourse of much interest, and no doubt profitable to those who heard it.

Morning Session. Friday, Oct. 8th, 10 o'clock A. M., conference met according to agreement, and after prayer, proceeded to business. Called for, and heard read the report of last year's conference. It was accepted. Reports of churches in different parts of the state were then called for, and the places reported as follows:—Sugar Hill, Lake Village, Loudon, Canterbury, Warner, East Weare, West Boscawen, Loudon Ridge, Hill, Danbury, Meredith Neck, Meredith Centre, Waterloo, Franklin, Barnstead, North Barnstead, Chichester, Pittsfield, Nashua, Auburn, Manchester, Wilmot Centre, Rye, Hampton, Exeter, Kensington, Goffstown, South Weare, New Boston, Candia, Epsom, South Benton, Tuftonborough, West Ossipee, Meredith Village, and Madison. (A few of the above named places were reported by brethren who came in at an adjourned meeting; but in order that the reports might appear together, the clerk has taken liberty to so arrange them.)

The reports were mostly interesting, and full of encouragement. Some churches had enjoyed extensive revivals during the past year. The church at Sugar Hill had increased in number 130; and if the clerk did not misunderstand, over 100 were added by baptism. As the reports were all verbal, and nothing but hasty minutes taken at the time, some errors may appear in the report; but to sum up the whole in few words, we should say, for the past year several new churches had been formed, four young men ordained to the work of the gospel ministry, viz.,—Brn. John H. Clark, Allenstown; Nathaniel Davidson, Salisbury; Westley B. Davis, Warren; Thatcher W. Piper, Tuftonborough; and hundreds, we should judge, were converted and added by baptism, as set forth in the several reports. Sabbath schools and Bible classes, as far as reported, quite prosperous. On the whole, the reports gave the most encouraging aspect of religious interest among us in the state, so far as heard from, that we have ever had since the organization of the conference.

Adjourned to meet at the close of the afternoon meeting of worship.

Afternoon Session. Preaching by Elder Peter Clark; founded on Mal. 3: 18. "Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."

Bro. Clark spoke nearly three fourths of an hour in a clear and distinct utterance, and, apparently, with the vigor of youth. Said he was that day "seventy-seven years old!" and "sixty-nine years" of his life he had been laboring in the defence of the gospel. He expressed the conviction that it might be his last effort at preaching! The season was one of unusual interest, and quite a number follwed Elder Clark, in bearing witness to the truth.

At the close of the meeting of worship, conference resumed its business according to adjournment.—Heard the remainder of the reports from the churches. (See above.) On motion, agreed to receive Elder W. B. Davis, and Bro. T. W. Piper, as members of the conference. Adjourned till 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Evening. Preaching by Elder J. V. Himes.—Text, 2 Kings 6: 15, 16. The discourse of brother Himes was unusually interesting, and afforded great encouragement to the timid and doubtful.

Saturday, Oct. 9th. Ministers met in conference at 8 o'clock, A. M., according to previous notice, and in accordance with a resolution passed at the last annual meeting, which reads as follows:—"Resolved, That during the session of each annual conference, there shall be an examination of the condition and character of the ministers belonging to the body." Ministers present belonging to the conference, as follows:—Elders J Harvey, I. H. Shipman, B. Locke, S. S. Mooney, G. W. Thompson, B. P. Manning, W. B. Davis, J. Morse, J. Knowles, T. M. Preble, and Bro. T. W. Piper. Elders P. Clark, D. F. Leavitt and Bro. N. Davidson, attended the state conference, but were not present at the minister's conference. Brn. in the ministry who did not attend the State conference, but were inquired after, and were reported by some one present, were Elders J. Morrill, N. Glidden, O. G. Smith, J. H. Clark, L. Allen, W. H. Eastman, J. Couch; and unordained preachers, S. Goodhue, J. Pettingill, and C. Emerson. The session lasted one hour. Love and union was manifested by all present; and as far as ascertained, the ministers belonging to the conference were in fellowship with each other; and no one was suffering very much in consequence of pecuniary embarrassment; although some expressed anxiety in regard to the future, in view of the peculiar "hard times" which still threaten the country! Our meeting was one of great interest; and no doubt profitable to the cause of Christ. Adjourned till the next annual conference.

Nine o'clock. General conference mét according to adjournment. Called for a report from the committee appointed at the last annual meeting in accordance with the following preamble and resolution on the subject of "Young men for the ministry."

"Whereas there are pious young men within the bounds of the conference, who are impressed with the duty of entering upon the gospel ministry; and whereas such persons need the sympathy, counsel and assistance of fathers in the ministry;

Resolved, that a standing committee of three be appointed to advise with and give assistance to such persons among us as are called to this solemn and responsible work; and that the church and ministry are earnestly invited to co-operate in this work, and to pray the Lord of the harvest, that he will multiply pastors and teachers to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom."

Inasmuch as the question had already been before the conference, as brought out in the reports of the churches, and ministers' conference, the committee are not required to make any particular report at this time. (See report above)

Agreeably to the foregoing resolution, however, the following brethren were appointed the committee for the ensuing year: Elder J. Harvey, Pittsfield; T. M. Preble, East Weare; and I. H. Shimman, Sugar Hill. Called for, and heard the report of the committee on the place of a more permanent organization of this conference. Agreed to accept the report as far as to discharge the committee from further duty. After hearing remarks from Brn. Harvey, Manning, Shipman, Himes and Preble, the report was laid on the table. The committee on Sabbath schools were called on to report, but were not prepared, and therefore discharged.

The interests and wants of the Advent Herald were now introduced by Bro. Himes, and remarks made by Brn. J. Harvey, S. K. Baldwin, F. Davis. G. W. Thompson, and J. Aldrich; expressing deep sympathy for, and a willingness to aid the paper in its present embarrassed condition; when the conference adjourned to meet at the close of the afternoon meeting of worship.

Afternoon meeting. Preaching by Bro. Himes; text, Mark 6: 1—6.

At the close of the meeting of worship, the conference convened according to adjournment; when the subject of the Advent Herald was resumed; and the following resolution, introduced by Bro. Himes, was passed; viz:—

Resolved, That this conference deeply symathize in the present interests and wants of the Advent Herald, and recommend that our ministers and churches should take immediate measures to aid it by subscriptions and otherwise as they shall deem best.

On motion, voted, that Elders I. H. Shipman, T. M. Preble, G. W. Thompson, and J. Morse, be delegates to the General Conference to be holden at Worcester, Mass., Nov. next.

A vote of thanks to the friends and brethren at Lake Village, for their free and generous entertainment of the conference, was now passed.

Conference then adjourned to the call of the clerk, at such time and place as he may deem proper.

Evening. Preaching by Bro, Himes, founded on Dan. 2:44.

Sabbath morning. Preaching by Bro. Himes, from Matt. 25: 1-13.

Afternoon. Preaching by Bro. Himes, from Rev. 11:15-18, at the close of which Bro. T. W. Piper, of Tuftonborough, was publicly set apart to the gospel ministry in the following order:—Prayer, and laying on of hands by Elders B. Locke, J. Morse, J. Knowles, and D. F. Leavitt; charge by T. M. Preble; right hand of fellowship by J. Morse; voluntary by the choir; and benediction by Bro. Piper, the candidate.

At the evening meeting preaching again by Bro. Himes, founded on Isa. 9: 6: 7.

The meetings of worship during the session were well attended, and the word preached was listened to with apparent interest, and it is hoped with profit.

Thus closed the fifth session of the New Hampshire state conference. From the encouraging prospects as set forth in the reports of the state, of the cause of Christ within the bounds of this conference, we have reason to "thank God and take courage."

BRO. GRANT:—In looking over my Crisis I saw a request that those who preached the gospel would write more for your paper. I therefore comply with your request, hoping that believers in the speedy coming of Christ, and in the doctrine of life only through Christ, may receive some encouragement to persevere in the way of truth

One year ago the writer was a local preacher in the M. E. Church of this place. Through a sermon preached by Bro. Geo. Storrs about six years since, on the subject of Life and Death, I was led to search the Scriptures more closely, and after diligent study, fighting against prejudice and counting the cost, I commenced advocating the doctrine of Life and Death in the Church when an opportunity offered, for which I was severely censured, and at the next Quarterly Conference that body refused to renew my license, and I withdrew from the Church.

I did search the Scriptures, believing there was sufficient proof in the Bible to refute so dangerous a doctrine as "The wages of sin is Death;" but the more I searched, the less I found to sustain the cherished and inhuman theory of eternal torments, and I obtained help of the Lord to come out for the truth. A pair of clerical pretenders thought to put down the heresy by ridiculing it, but they only made matters worse for themselves. I met what they called their arguments, and they finally left the field in utter disgrace. I engaged the Temperance Hall here, and commenced preaching on my own hook. My father and two other brethren (all second Adventists) had held the views I was advocating for some years. They nobly stood by me and encouraged me much. Since that time, which will be one year next December, we have had preaching in the Hall. We had, and still have persecution; but the Lord has been our strength in the day of trial. Glory be to his name! Our little company of four has increased. We have now from thirty to forty hearers every Lord's day. We have a Bible class at 10 1-2 A. M., and preaching at 3 1-2 P. M. The brethren worshipping at the Hall on 9th and Spring Garden sts., viz: Bros. H. Grew, Wm. Stuart, Wm. Ashman, J. Grim, S. Park and others, are helping us by preaching the word of life. May the Lord reward them with eternal life in the kingdom of his dear Son—a kingdom we are earnestly desiring and looking for.

We are now trying to open the way for spreading the truth in Germantown, about four miles from this place. I have preached there for the fourth time, last evening, at the house of Bro. Axe, and will continue to do so if the Lord permit. I believe the truth will gain some ground, as it has done here, though through much opposition. Still I feel encouraged to persevere in the good work. May the Lord use me for his glory.

When I read of the campmeetings and conference meetings in the Crisis, my heart yearns to be among the believers in the near approach of the Savior to deliver his tried ones; but my business will not allow of it yet. The Crisis has been a great benefit to me. I would not be without it if possible to get it. Truly my lot is cast in a pleasant place as regards christian privileges. Praise the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits to me.

Yours looking for, and hastening to the coming of Christ, CHA'S. H. SUTTON.

EDEN HOME.

AIR.—"The old Granite State."

O the earth, with its flowers, is a dark earth to me,
Death lurks within its bowers and sweeps the sparkling sea;
There is no spot so sunny, so peaceful, or so fair,
Where love twines its tendrils, but he is brooding there.
Glad his requiem I'd be singing in my blest Eden home.

My precious household treasures have yet escaped his dart,
But his wing sweeps so near them, it makes the nestlings start;
And we all cling together, so closely and so strong,
But soon he may sever all the dear ones at home.
But though sever'd, we'll be gather'd in our own Eden home.

I've a mother that is sleeping in the dark, cold grave,
She was the brightest jewel God ever to me gave;
Will the heart be warm never, that beat warmly for me?
The earth hide forever her gushing love so free?
No, my mother, soon I'll meet her in a bright Eden home.

There are suffering millions in this dark vale of tears,
That curse God in anguish, and die in their fears;
But the church breathes a prayer in each sorrowing breath,
Buoy'd up by a love that is stronger far than death;
Ever looking for a kingdom in a pure Eden home.

O my heart is ever yearning for the land of rest,
And I feel the spirit's groaning in my grief-worn breast,
Crying Jesus is expecting; the bride waited long,
The blood of martyr's crying, O let thy kingdom come!
Come, Lord Jesus, O come quickly, in thine own Eden home!

There no rose will be tinted with the blood of the slain,
Or the spotless lily bend o'er the foul crimson stain;
And the air will not be burthen'd with grief's softest sigh,
Or tears ever sparkle in the immortal eye.
Blessed kingdom, haste its glory in a fair Eden home.

Though my pathway so rugged and thorny oft doth seem,
It is lit with lights from glory with many a beam;
While the melting dews of sorrow fall 'round me like pearl,
Hope's angel bears the anchor near my sinking soul.
Shows the kingdom, bright in prospect, in my own Eden home.

The peace that Jesus gives us is worth a life of pain,
The martyrs bore its impress, encircled by the flame;
The choicest gem of heaven he twines around the heart,
No sweeter could be given, no richer could impart.
Let the peaceful kingdom hasten, in the new Eden home.

"But not as the world giveth," he added here a charm;
For they dispense their favors to noble, rich and young;
He to the poor and wretched this blessed peace did give,
It is the outcast's portion that Jesus did bequeath.
Soon we'll share it, in its fullness, in our own Eden home.

Though I walk 'neath the shadow with the cross on my breast,
Earth's bloody sun is setting low in the crimson west;
And the misty vail is parting, and through its azure fold,
I see the crystal river and the crown of gold.
Robes are given, harps are ringing, in my own Eden home.

For the Crisis.

"If God be for Us, who can be against Us?"

Thus queried the beloved Apostle Paul when addressing the Romans. "Who," says he, "shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth." We may be condemned by the world, yea, we expect to be; this we can willingly bear, for we know that Jesus suffered before us. We also know that he died to save us from eternal death, and that he now sits at the right hand of God, making intercession with the Father for us. If we feel justified of God, and live in subjection to his divine commands, we have the promise of life everlasting, an inheritance with Christ in our Father's kingdom. And is not this precious promise a sufficient impetus to induce the chosen of God to a renewed exertion in the cause of our beloved Lord and Master? Is it not enough that we have the testimony and the experience of our Savior, the only begotten Son of the Father, that though like as he must endure persecutions, and revilings, and like as he be sorely tried and tempted, that we shall also like him be received into the kingdom of his Father in Heaven? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or peril, separate us from the love of Christ? God forbid!

We have to endure persecutions, temptations and revilings; we have to submit to the scoffs and hatred of the workers of iniquity, the chosen co-workers of the devil. We have contrary winds and tides to contend with; darkness often surrounds us; perils are on every hand; and sometimes even Jesus seems withdrawn from us. The stormy gales of trouble blow from various quarters; bitter disappointments, perplexing cares, the injuries of foes; and far worse, the slights of friends; painful diseases, or heart-breaking bereavements, tearing from us loved ones with whom our very life was bound together, and leaving a blank nothing earthly can fill. Yet, amidst trials like these, do we hear the voice of Him who is always for us, saying, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

O, if we could recognize Christ more vividly in all our troubles; to lose sight of human agency in the absorbing contemplation of Jesus!

But how insignificant are our sufferings when compared with those which were endured by our Savior coming to this world of sorrow and sin to suffer and die for us, when we were enemies to God. He left the habitation of glory for the stable of an inn, the homage of angels for the insults of men, the smiles of his Father for the temptations of the devil, the raptures of heaven for the groans of Gethsemane, the splendor of the throne for the ignominy of the cross, the brightness of the celestial glory for the darkness of the tomb.

It hardly seems possible that upon earth there could be found a heart so ungrateful as to reject the offers of pardon, so freely given. O that we, dear readers, may continue steadfast in this blessed and soul saving road to Heaven! May we ever be able to say, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" H. E. RONEY.

The Christian's Home.

No spot on earth is prized like home. The affections, like the woodbine, climb around the old doorway, and nestle under the window in ever verdant festoons. Memory clings to every familiar scene with undying vigor; though years have passed since the foot crossed the old threshold, the unbroken fireside circle, the kind advice of a father, the earnest solicitude of a mother, the pleasant hours spent in the society of brothers and sisters, are all pictured on the retina of the mind, as its strong eye glances back over the scenes of intervening time and rests on that sacred spot—Home.

But there is a home dearer to some hearts than this. It is not in the past. There are no sad strains in the song of that home caused by the death of the father and mother, and the breaking up of the band, scattering its joys like the withered leaves in the Autumn breezes. "There, in that home, will be no broken bands—all, all are there."

This is the Christian's home; the place where his hopes are staid, where his heart and his treasures are. He may love the old roof which first gave him shelter, as well as man can love; but it was only a faint emblem of this future home. It was too imperfect to allow such strong attachments as it is safe to place in that perfect, beautiful home in glory. Sin was in that old household; some, perhaps, were unconverted. Sin surrounded it; friends and neighbors were out of Christ. The other home is a pure and holy circle, where the blight of sin, and the chill of death can never enter. There are the blessed Jesus, the pure bright angels, the just made perfect, singing one harmonius song of eternal union and peace. There the family of the just strike their golden harps with a more exulting strain, as its members sing "Home at last, and home forever. Saved through the blood of the Lamb."

Cheer, thee, brother and sister, on thy way thither; thy home is prepared for thee; there thou shalt rest.

GREAT IDEAS AND SMALL DUTIES.—A soul occupied with great ideas best performs small duties. The divinest views of life penetrate most clearly into the meanest emergencies. So far from petty principles being best proportioned to petty trials, a heavenly spirit taking up its abode with us can alone sustain well the daily toils and tranquilly pass the humiliations of our condition. Even in intellectual culture, the ripest knowledge is the best qualified to instruct the most complete ignorance. So, the trivial services of social life are the best performed, and the lesser particles of domestic happiness are most skilfully organized, by the deepest and fairest heart.

My Experience.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me through the columns of your valuable paper, to contribute my mite for the benefit and edification of its numerous readers, and in no way can I do it more readily, than by giving you a brief account of myself, my first investigation of the scriptures of truth, and experience in the cause of Christ.

Until within the past five years, I have been a careless and indifferent reader and hearer of the truths of the gospel, reading my Bible more to find fault with it than a desire to understand its teachings, often laying it aside and condemning it as a book of mysteries, which I could neither reconcile or solve. But thanks be to our blessed Lord, who was pleased, in his mercy, to send our good Brother and Sister Seymour into our midst, to proclaim the glad tidings of the kingdom of God and other kindred truths. Something over five years since they came to this place and commenced a series of lectures on Prophecy, the first I had ever heard. I listened, and wondered in amazement, if what they were preaching were the teachings of the Scriptures. A new light broke in upon my beclouded vision. I commenced studying my Bible with another object, determined to investigate for myself and know if these things were really so. I soon became convinced of the truth; but my proud, rebellious heart was unwilling to acknowledge it, and bow in humble submission to the commands of my heavenly Father.

From my childhood, I had been taught that baptism was a mere matter of conscience, and that sprinkling or pouring was as much baptism as immersion; in short, I had a great horror of immersion, and thought that nothing could induce me to subject myself to the humiliation of being put under the water. For many weary months after being convinced that nothing but immersion was baptism, I struggled with this pride of heart, unwilling to yield, and finding no rest, day or night.

Finally, in the midst of my heart struggles, I listened to a discourse from Bro. Hoyt on faith, repentance, and baptism, which did its work. My pride became as filthy rags, and I found that unless I confessed my sins and obeyed the commands of the Lord, I should be irretrievably lost. At the close of the sermon it was announced that the ordinance of baptism would be attended to, and a good sister witnessing my tears, and knowing the state of my mind, came to me and inquired if there was any reason why I could not be baptized. I replied, that I was ready and willing if my husband would accompany me; that I could not go without him. I went to him, made known my feelings, and asked if he was not ready to obey the Lord. He replied that he did not feel it duty at that time, but wished me to do so if I felt it to be my duty. But I could not go without him. With a heavy heart I returned from the water feeling that perhaps I had neglected the last call of mercy. I went to my closet, and with tears and prayers besought my heavenly Father not to cast me off forever. In the evening attended meeting again, and at the close it was again announced that the ordinance of baptism would be again attended to the next day. As a drowning man catches at a straw, so did I at this announcement. I felt it was my last and only hope. The next day I informed my husband of my determination to be baptized, and urged him to go with me. He expressed a willingness to do so. Accordingly, at the appointed time, we repaired with others to the water's side, and there in the likeness of the blessed Redeemer was buried in baptism; and if poor and sinful mortal ever experienced joy and peace in believing and obeying, it was myself. And if any of your readers are in like circumstance, I would say to them, go and do likewise.

From that day to this, I have been striving for that rest that remains for the children of God. Although at times almost discouraged and weary with earth's cares and trials, yet I have ever found the promise good in every trying hour of need: "my grace is sufficient for thee,"—and strength has been given me according to my day. Capture of the Temple at Jerusalem.

The royal porch of Herod, with its double aisles and central nave, the noblest feature of the temple, now blazed from end to end. Hundreds of the Jews perished in this storm of fire. Titus called his chiefs together, and deliberated on the fate of the sanctuary. Destroy it utterly, exclaimed some, retain it for ransom, suggested others; but Titus himself, so at least we are assured by his panegyrist, was anxious at all events to save it. Perhaps he regarded it as a trophy of victory, possibly he had imbibed in his Eastern service some reverence for the mysteries it enshrined; and even the fortunes of his family disposed him to superstition. He ordered the flames to be quenched; but while his soldiers were employed in checking them, the Jews sallied from their stronghold; a last struggle ensued. Titus swept the foe from the court with a charge of cavalry, and as they shut the gates behind them, a Roman, climbing on his comrades' shoulders, flung a blazing brand through a lattice opening. The flames shot up; the Jews shrank, shrieking and yelling, from their parapets. Titus, roused from sleep to which he had for a moment betaken himself, commanded or implored his men to save their glorious conquest.

But his voice was drowned in the tumult; his gestures were disregarded; the soldiers burst the gate or scaled the walls, and rushed in headlong, trampling in their frenzy upon one another, and hewing themselves a way through the shattered masses of the enemy. The stair of the Holy Place ran with torrents of blood, over which rolled the bodies of the dead; but the women and children, the old and helpless, had collected around the altar above it, and there was consummated the sacrifice, the bloodiest and the last of the Ancient Covenant. Through the flames and smoke, over the dead and dying, Titus forced his way into the Holy of Holies, and gazed for a moment on the wonders, so vaunted by the Jews, so disparaged by the Gentiles, which neither Gentile nor Jew, the High Priest alone excepted, was ever suffered to look upon.

Here the fire had not yet penetrated. He rushed forth to provide for its protection, urging his men with words, and even with blows, to stay the advancing surges. But their fury was deaf, their cupidity was insensible; they had caught sight of the gates plated with silver, windows lined with gold; the sanctuary, they had heard, was filled with unimaginable riches, and they feared to be baulked of their plunder. While their chief was still parleying with them, a soldier, who had pushed within the veil beside him, and remained behind, applied a torch to the door, and enveloped the place in flames. Titus looked back with a sigh, but made no further attempt to save it. He withdrew despondingly from the spot—the divine decree was accomplished.—Charles Merivale's History of the Romans.

"Lay by Me till Morning."

A week ago last Sabbath evening, at the young men's prayer meeting in the Rev. Dr. Brainerd's church, in this city, a stranger arose, and begged the privilege to speak, announcing himself as captain of a vessel now in port, and a professor of the religion of Christ. "I wish," says he, "to warn the impenitent here that delays are dangerous. It is not safe to put off until to-morrow what ought to be done this day. It was my lot, when sailing, to fall in with that ill-fated steamer, the Central America. The night was closing in, the sea rolling high, but I hailed the crippled steamer, and asked if they needed help. 'I am in a sinking condition,' cried Captain Herndon. 'Had you not better send your passengers on board now?' I replied. 'Will you not lay by me until morning?' responded Captain H. 'I will try,' I replied, 'but had you not better send your passengers on board?' 'Lay by me till morning,' again said Captain Herndon. I made the effort to lie by him; but at night, with such a sea rolling, no vessel could control its position, and I never saw the steamer more. In one hour and a half after the Captain said 'Lay by me till morning,' the vessel with its living freight went down, and he himself, with a great majority of his passengers and crew, were coffined in the deep. So much for procrastination. But for this delay, the entire crew and passengers of the Central America might have been saved. Sinners, when urged to immediate repentance, don't say to beseeching friends, to offered mercy, to a striving Spirit, 'Not now, lay by me longer still, till I have a convenient time.' This night you may sink in the waves of perdition."—American Presbyterian.

NEVER FORGOTTEN.—A rich landlord of England once cruelly oppressed a poor widow. Her son, a little boy of eight years, saw it. He afterwards became a painter, and painted a life-likeness of the scene. Years afterwards he placed it where the man saw it. He turned pale, trembled in every joint, and offered any sum to purchase it, that he might put it out of sight. Thus there is an invisible painter drawing on the canvas of the soul a life-likeness, reflecting correctly all the passions and actions of our spiritual history on earth. Eternity will reveal them to every man. We must meet our earth-life again.

"They Say."

Mr. Tattle.—You are a stranger in these parts, I reckon, mistor.

Mr. Rollins.—What makes you think so?

Mr. T.—Well, you kind of stared about you as you got out of the cars, as if the place didn't look familiar.

Mr. R.—Do you know a Mrs. Rollins in this town?

Mr. T.—Is it she that lives in the brown cottage on the hill yonder?

Mr. R.—The same.

Mr. T.—Well, I can't say I visit her, but I can tell you all about her. Poor woman!

Mr. R.—Why do you say that? Is any thing the matter with her?

Mr. T.—She has had a hard time of it. Poor young thing! A month after her marriage, and just as she had got fixed there in the cottage, her scamp of a husband ran off to California.

Mr. R.—"Scamp of a husband! Ran off!" (Indignant.) What do you mean, sir! (Checking himself) Excuse me. What did he run off for?

Mr. T.—For robbing a bank. So they say.

Mr. R.—Who say?

Mr. T.—They say.

Mr. R.—Who are they?

Mr. T.—The world generally. Everybody says. People say.

Mr. R.—Can you name a single person besides yourself who says it?

Mr. T.—Really, so many people say it, that I cannot think of any one in particular.

Mr. R.—Perhaps I will quicken your memory by and by. But what of Mrs. Rollins?

Mr. T.—She's on the point of being married again. So they say.

Mr. R.—Indeed! To whom?

Mr. T.—To a Mr. Edward Edwards.

Mr. R.—(Aside.) Her own brother. (Aloud.)—Are you sure of this?

Mr. T.—O, yes! He has been residing in the house with her. They take romantic walks together. The wedding is to take place immediately. So they say.

Mr. R.—Who say?

Mr. T.—Well, I told you. They say. What would you have more?

Mr. R.—Who are they?

Mr. T.—How should I know? You are the most unreasonable man I ever met with. I say they, and you ask who say?—as if any better authority could be given!

Mr. R.—Did They say ever say that you were a meddling, prying, gossipping, impertinent, mischievous, unscrupulous, malicious retailer of absurd slanders?

Mr. T.—What do you mean, sir, by such language? I'll have you arrested. Lawyer Fleece-em is my particular friend. If there was only a witness at hand, sir, I'd make you pay a pretty sum for this. Keep your hands off, sir! No matter, sir; kick me—kick me! I see a witness yonder. I'll have you arrested for assault and battery. Kick me, if you like.

Mr. R.—I shall not indulge you so far. But take warning, sir, how you quote Mr. They say for your scandalous reports. Old They say is a liar and a coward.

Mr. T.—That's libelous, sir. I wish I knew your name.

Mr. R.—My name is Rollins, and that cottage on the hill there is mine.

Mr. T.—Wheugh! You Mr. Rollins?

Mr. R.—The same.

Mr. T.—Didn't you once rob a bank?

Mr. R.—I once plucked a rose from a bank in a friend's garden, whereupon another friend playfully remarked that he had caught me robbing a bank. Some Irish laborers heard him say it, and may have misunderstood it. This, probably is the foundation for your story.

Mr. T.—But isn't your wife going to be married? Doesn't she walk out every day with a young man?

Mr. R.—That young man is her poor, consumptive brother, who has come here for a change of air. Let me advise you, friend They say, to look before you leap another time.—Sargent's Monthly.

A Quaker Lady's Dream.

There is a beautiful story told of a pious old Quaker lady, who was much addicted to smoking tobacco. She had indulged herself in this habit until it increased so much upon her that she not only smoked her pipe a large portion of the day, but frequently sat up in her bed for this purpose in the night. After one of these nocturnal entertainments she fell asleep, and dreamed that she died and approached heaven. Meeting an angel, she asked him if her name was written in the book of life. He disappeared, but replied upon returning that he could not find it.

"Oh," said she, "do look again; it must be there."

He examined again, but returned with a sorrowful face, saying, "it is not there."

"Oh," said she in agony, "it must be there; I have the assurance that it is there! Do look again!"

The angel was moved to tears by her entreaties, and again left her to renew his search. After a long absence he came back, his face radiant with joy, and exclaimed:

"We have found it, but it was so clouded with tobacco smoke that we could hardly see it!"

The woman, upon waking, immediately threw her pipe away, and never indulged in smoking again.

TRUE DUNCAN AND HIS CAT.

Once there was a little boy named Duncan. The boys used to call him True Duncan, because he would never tell a lie. One day he was playing with an axe in the yard of the school, and while he was chopping a stick the teacher's cat, Tabby, came along. Duncan let the axe fall right on poor Tabby's head, and killed her. What to do, he did not know. She was a pet of the master, and used to sit on a cushion at his side while he was hearing the lessons.

"Now, fellows," said one of the boys, "we shall see if Duncan can't make up a fib as well as the rest of us."

Big Jones stepped up, and taking the cat by the tail, said, "Here, boys, I will just fling her into the alley, and we can tell Mr. Cole that the butcher's dog killed her; you know he worried her last week."

Several of them thought this would do very well. But Duncan looked quite angry.

"No!" said he, "no! do you think I would lie for such a creature as that? It would be a lie, a lie, a LIE!" and every time he said the word, his voice grew louder and louder. Then he picked up the poor thing in his arms, and carried it into the school-room, and the boys followed to see what would be done. The master looked up and said, "What is this? My faithful mouser dead! Who could have done me such an injury?" All were silent for a little while. As soon as Duncan could get his voice, he said, "Mr. Cole, I am very sorry—but here is the truth. I can't lie, sir: I killed Tabby, but am very sorry for it. I ought to have been more careful, for I saw her continually rubbing her sides against the log. I am very sorry, sir." Every one expected Mr. Cole to take down his long rattan. On the contrary, he put on a pleasant smile and said, "Duncan, you are a brave boy. I heard and saw all that passed from my window above. I would rather lose an hundred cats than miss an example of truth and honor in my school. Your best reward is what you now feel in your own conscience, but I beg you to accept this handsome knife, as a token of my approbation." Duncan took out his little handkerchief and wiped his eyes. The boys could no longer restrain themselves, and when Tom Pooley cried out, "Three cheers for True Duncan!" all joined in a hearty hurrah.

"Be brave, my child, to take up arms
Against the dread array
Of foes of truth that you must face,
Be what thy future may.

Flee flattery's smile; seduction's net
Is spread out to betray
Unwary youth; and think and speak
And act the truth alway."

GIVE ME A HOME.

O give me a home in the regions of bliss,
Where no sorrow shall ever invade,
Where the glory of Jesus eternally is,
And the pilgrim's deep woe is repaid.

I have jewels most dear journeying on to that land,
But they fade and they die at my side;
I would bear them, dear Lord, safely to thy right hand,
E'er to live, since a Savior hath died.

I have flowers precious too, but they fade at their birth,—
Their fragrance can refresh me no more;
I must lay them away in thy bosom, O Earth,
And march on till I gain the bless'd shore.

Take me home to the land of eternal delight,—
To Mount Zion, O haste! take me home,
Where the pilgrim shall walk with the angels in white,
And from blessedness shall never more roam.

I am weary and sad;—here death conquering reigns,
Friends' presence can cheer me no more;
Take me home, where their voices roll o'er the bright plains,
And all their deep sorrow is o'er. MARIA.

The Discussion.

Doubtless all the readers of the Crisis, as well as thousands of others, have heard of the late discussion between the Editor of this paper and Dr. Litch of Philadelphia. The subject was one of the most interesting ever brought before the public. During the four consecutive evenings of the debate, the lecture-room was filled with a profoundly attentive audience, who listened with breathless interest to the earnest disputants as they brought up and arranged their order of attack and defence. It being of a comparatively recent date since I abjured the long established dogma of the everlasting torture of the wicked, therefore I marked with strict attention the champion of the affirmative as he intrenched himself within those old tenets, which antiquated superstition and imperfect understanding of the Scriptures have created, to the dishonor of God and the spreading of infidelity. A year ago I would have considered his position as invulnerable, and have thrown myself and my creed within his lines with perfect honesty and confidence, as undoubtedly Dr. Litch did, and calmly awaited the heaviest assault which could be brought to bear against me, assured that I had the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

In justice to Dr. Litch I would say, that he made the best disposition of his forces which he possibly could; and to a superficial eye occupied a favorable position. Public sympathy was in his favor, for he but echoed the time-hallowed errors of the masses, which have gone further to make infidelity than any other machine which the ingenuity of the devil or man could devise.

I could not, if I had time and space even, bring forth one out of every score of proofs which Eld. Grant, brought forward to clear the character of his Divine Master from the tremendous calumny which had long rested upon it. As he brought to bear each piece of his powerful battery, levelling it with the unerring precision of truth, it was grand to see the defenses of the opposition crumble like a tottering wall beneath the heavy discharge of siege artillery. The beautiful arrangement which characterized Eld. Grant's attack, evinced that he had taken all pains to arrange his materials according to their different classification, so that there was no hurry or confusion in hunting up direct evidence to bear upon a particular thesis. His tactics evinced consummate knowledge of the subject discussed, and served greatly to establish that victory which candor will admit was achieved.

One rare quality which distinguished the disputants in this important debate is deserving of notice, and at the close elicited a unaminous demonstration of approval from the audience, namely, a christian spirit, which was not for a moment ruffled or disturbed at the warmest and most keenly contested periods of the discussion. Earnest they were, indeed, as the mighty topic demanded, but a magnanimous patience and gentlemanly courtesy marked their course throughout.

The two first evenings were occupied in endeavoring, on the one hand to establish, and on the other to disprove the idea that man was immortal. To me it was astonishing to hear the multitude of Bible proofs produced, and poured out with lavish abundance, showing to every candid reasoner that, when the breath of life departed, man was DEAD, and through Christ alone had immortality. But as the "question" of the discussion proceeded, the interest became intense. The recital of that sad and gloomy faith, which marred and blotted the brightest attributes of God, cast a thrill of vague horror over the listening multitude. The radiant glory of the King of heaven seemed wofully begrimmed and sullied by the black, anguished-tossed smoke, which arose forever from the billowing flames of eternal pain. Where was the mercy, where the justice, where the wisdom, of such insatiate revenge? How could that ear so sensitive to the voice of prayer, endure for ages without number the ceaseless shricks and yells of the tortured and hopeless, helpless damned! Man might fear, but who could love a sovereign God like that?

But when the champion of our faith advanced the spotless standard of his Lord, on whose broad field of white, Love, Wisdom and Justice were emblazoned, marshalled his forces, and indignantly denied the calumny upon his Master, the senses drank in the words which proved how awfully his character had been maligned. That he was holy, just and wise, in saving all who would have him for their God, and making those who persisted in their wickedness as though they never had a being.

As the speaker gradually brought out his points of beauty, there was a spirit of strong conviction brooding over the assembly, and a rustling like the leaves of a forest before a gale; and when he exclaimed, after alluding to the dogma of eternal torture, "I wonder that it has not made more infidels than it has already done!" neither the sacred nature of the subject, or the calling of the disputants, could restrain the multitude from breaking forth into a hearty approval of the sentiment. Although Eld. Grant strongly reprehended it, and Eld. F. H. Berick seeing it pending, made a gesture to stop it, it had to come; nor could any earthly power have availed to arrest that spontaneous assent to the glorious truths brought forth to their view.

The discussion has brought forth some excellent fruit already, and that it may take root and spread, and bring forth abundantly, I most heartily say Amen.

PROMISES.—The following sentences from the pen of William Gurnall deserve much pondering; they will raise a vital question in the mind of those who have never felt the sweetness of the promises in the hour of need.

"Promises are like the clothes we wear. If there be heat in the body to warm them, they warm us; but if there be none, they give none. So where there is living faith, the promise will afford warm comfort; but on a dead, unbelieving heart, it lies cold and ineffectual: it has no more effect than pouring a cordial down the throat of a corpse. Again, the promises do not throw out comfort as fire throws out heat; for then we should only need to go to them in order to be warmed: their heat is like the fire in the flint, which must be struck out by force, and this force can only be applied by faith."—Christian Armor.

The Saint's Legacy.

The saint's legacy—or saint's inheritance, is purchased by Christ, and offered freely without money, or price, to all the "pure in heart." The Apostle Paul to the Hebrew brethren remarks as follows; Now we all know where a testament, (or legacy) is, there must also, of necessity, be the death of the testator; for a testament is of force after men are dead; otherwise it is of no strength while the testator liveth.—God has "confirmed this by an oath"—Jesus has signed the declaration, by saying, "It is finished." And furthermore; this legacy to God's dear children, was ratified in heaven on his ascension there. Our Heavenly Father being abundantly willing to show to the heirs of the promise, that his promise was irreversible, substantiated it by an oath, so that all those who have sought refuge in him, might have great consolation, and hold fast the hope promised to them.

The nature of this legacy is incorruptible, and undefiled, and fadeth not away. This is the quality which enhances its value beyond all human skill to calculate. Sin has corrupted this once beautiful world, and defiled all of its inhabitants, but, praise God, the promised inheritance will not be so; the curse will be removed! The whole world seems passing away; "but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." The saint's legacy has three remarkable properties: incorruptibility, purity, and an unfading nature. How fit and proper for the children of God, who have no continuing city here, to look for one to come which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. Now let us for a moment notice its duration. We learn from the "lively oracles," that the saint's legacy is to be an "eternal inheritance,"—an "everlasting habitation." "It shall not pass away" nor "be destroyed." Let us now consider its locality. The prophet of the Lord says, "The kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be (future tense) given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom. Jesus says, "The meek shall inherit the earth." God said to Abraham, "I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession, and I will be their God." Are we to understand this divine record as it reads? I think we must. The revelator is very explicit on this subject, and says; "They sang a new song, saying, thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and nation,—and hast made us unto our God, kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

We pass to notice the immense value of this legacy. Men of the world estimate the value of an estate generally from the consideration of its location, quality, utility, and the actual enjoyment which may be derived from it. Applying this rule, we are enable to form some adequate idea of the value of a farm, village, town, or country, which would in the aggregate amount to many millions; then add to this another country, and still another, until we have embraced the whole globe. What an inconceivable sum it would reach! But what is this in value, richness, or duration compared with the saint's legacy? It is but a drop when compared to the vast ocean; or a minor star compared to the noon-day sun!

There are a few invaluables named and included in this dowry, which may enable us to form a feeble conception of its value. There are those transparent "white robes." "Raiment of needle work," clothing of wrought gold." Then there are the "crowns of righteousness," "eternal life," and "of glory." Then the "harps of gold." Then the "towers," the "palaces," the "many mansions," &c. There are thrones upon which the redeemed are to sit and cooperate with the Messiah in his reign. The redeemed are to become royal diadems in the hands of God; armed with a two-edged sword, "they are to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishment upon the people, to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of irons, to execute the judgment written; this honor have all the saints."—Then in addition to this, there is an "everlasting kingdom," and those dominions included in this priceless legacy,—which was originally this earth, particularly that portion of it called Palestine, the same God has promised to purify, cleanse, and restore to its primeval loveliness, erasing every trace of the fall, rendering delectable the place of his sanctuary, and verifying the ancient prediction, "I will make the place of my feet glorious"—"Behold I make all things new." Amen!

"The Inner Man"

IS NOT A NATURALLY IMMORTAL MAN.

"The inner man" is "the new man;" and "the new man" is no other than "CHRIST in you the hope of glory." Amen. This and all like language has a common source in the gospel. It is expressive of the simple and obvious idea that "the old man" to be "put off" is the natural man;" while "the new man" is the "spiritual." The "spiritual" is always in contrast to the "carnal." "The first man—the old man—is of the earth, earthy. The second man—the new man—is the Lord (ruler) from heaven." 1 Cor. 15: 45–49; 2 Cor. 4: 13–18; Eph. 4: 22–25; 1 Pet. 3: 4. "Wives—whose adorning is (not outward but) the hidden MAN of the heart." No christian woman can have a "hidden man" in her save "Christ, the second man," is "formed" there (through grace) "the hope of glory!" He dwells in believers "by faith." Eph. 3: 17; 2 Cor. 5: 17; Gal. 6: 15; Eph. 1: 13.

ALL OF THIS belongs alone to the christian. No sinner has any other than "the old man." He has no sign or shadow—no breath or blush of "the new man" till he receives "CHRIST IN" him.

THE ARGUMENT AS TO "THE INNER MAN" IN ALL MEN.

The utter want of all plain testimony from Scripture to prove an undying "spiritual man" in all men, has left the advocates of that philosophical dogma no altertenative but to abandon inspiration in the argument; or else accommodate certain far-fetched, allusive phrases for proof—taking sound for sense, and mere appearance for positive proof. Hence this phrase, "inner man" sounds as if it were exactly suitable for their purpose; and if this and like phrases were used of all men—or the unbelieving and disobedient in particular, it would be proof direct to the point. But the mental, moral, personal qualities of a natural man are all but parts and faculties of "the old man"—of man as he now exists, having the characteristics of "the earthy"—the fallen "first man Adam."

Again, "the Evil One—the spirit that now rules in the children of disobedience," cannot be the "inner man"—the "hidden man of the heart;" because this is "the new man"—resulting from the "renewing into the image of Him that made us."

Furthermore, the ruling spirit in unbelievers cannot be this "inner man—new man" spoken of—because it is older altogether than "the old man" himself! Nay, this is no man at all; but the "old serpent—the Devil," that seduced the first man into sin, sorrow and death; by consequence, as there was no new man in prototype till Jesus came, the second Adam. As no one is the subject of this renewing into the lost image of Him that made them save those who "receive Christ by faith"—who have Him "formed IN THEM," this is "the inner man" so highly commended. Such are "changed into the same IMAGE, from glory to glory!" Such are in each instance "a new creature." "They shall be like Him, for they shall see Him as He is"—the just made perfect, and bear the image of the Heavenly." Amen.

Gleanings.

BY M. D. W.

The following is from the pen of a correspondent of the Christian Observer.

"During the ministry of my venerable predecessor, who served the congregation to which I was called for more than thirty years, there lived about three miles from the meeting-house a pious woman of Dutch extraction, a native of Holland, who could neither speak nor understand a single word of English. And yet, strange as it may seem to many modern church-goers, she attended upon all the ordinances of the sanctuary with the same regularity and conscientiousness as if she understood every syllable that was uttered. She was a woman of devout and eminent prayerfulness. In the course of Divine Providence it happened that a strange minister, who was travelling through the country, was invited to preach. Her family informed her of the fact, and she prepared to go. The appearance of a strange minister in those times, when the country was new and sparsely settled, was an event of rare occurrence. She went to hear him, but before entering the vehicle which was to convey her thither, she retired for secret prayer, and while there on her knees she prayed earnestly that God would enable her to understand but one word, only one single word of the sermon. She entered the house of God as usual, all the introductory exercises were performed as usual, and as usual she understood nothing, but when the minister opened the Bible and named the text, she all at once understood it. From the text she found that she understood the opening words of the sermon then the sermon itself, and ever afterward when she frequented the house of God, she understood each discourse without difficulty, whether from the lips of strangers, or from those of her own pastor.

These facts, which by many may be regarded as wonderful, occurred in the town of H——, D—— county, state of New York. Her name, if my memory serves me right, was Montfort. All the church and neighborhood resounded with the fame of her piety. She lived some years after, within the bounds of the congregation, and died a few years before I was called to minister in the place. The elders of the church, who related the facts to me, were men of most worthy and upright character, highly esteemed in the church, and by the world."

For the Crisis.

"And God shall wipe away all Tears from their Eyes."

And can it be there is a country so free from care and the dark blight of sin; so entirely free from the sorrows and trials of this earth, that those who inhabit it shall never more have need to weep? Will the heart never more be filled with grief and sadness, nor the eye grow dim with tears? Thank God for the heart-cheering promise of a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness; where those who shall walk in its glorious light shall never know care, or feel a pain, for God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us strive to live in such a manner that when Jesus comes to make all things new, we may be found worthy to participate in the joys of that blessed place, where the inhabitants shall never more say, I am sick; for nothing that is hurtful or offensive shall ever enter there. O, glorious rest! is not the prize worth striving for? O, lift up your heads, and rejoice, ye tried and weary ones, for your redemption draweth nigh. Yonder is an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

Death shall be banished from the place;
Our Jesus there shall reign;
There we shall see him face to face,
And never sin again.

Popular Theory of the Millennium.

In the "London Encyclopedia" we find the following:—"The most common modern opinion confines all the predictions respecting what has been called the Millennium, to a spiritual reign of Christ, by means of the universal reception of the gospel, and has been thus stated:

1. That the Scriptures afford ground to believe that the church will arrive to a state of prosperity it has never enjoyed.

2. That this will continue at least one thousand years, or a considerable space of time, in which the work of salvation will be fully accomplished in the full extent and glory of it. In this time the world will be filled with real christians, and continue full by constant propagation, to supply the place of those who leave the world; there will be MANY THOUSANDS born and live on the earth, to each one that has been born and lived during the preceding six thousand years. So that if they who shall be born in that thousand years shall be all, or most of them saved, as they will be, there will be, on the whole, many thousands of mankind saved to one that shall be finally lost."

Is not this Universalism, at one end of the dispensation at least? And how utterly adverse to the teachings of "scripture" this "modern opinion."—

"The parable of the sower," Matt. 13: 3–8, 18–23, if it applies to the entire of the gospel dispensation, contradicts this theory. So does "the Parable of the tares of the field," Matt. 13: 24–30, 36–43, present a different view.

Christ teaches in contrariety to the above "peace and safety cry" as follows; (Matt. 7: 13,) "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat. Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and FEW there be that find it."

What a pity that "the most common opinion" among "modern" christians should thus flatly contradict Christ, by affirming that as a final result, "many thousands shall be saved to one that shall be finally lost," thus emphatically making the way to life broad, and the way to destruction extremely narrow. Why not with equal propriety go a little further in opposition to revealed truth, and so teach the salvation of all men, and dispense with the narrow way to destruction entirely?

The above theory being admitted, where will those millennial saints find room for residence, "the many thousands to each one born during the preceding six thousand years," all living on this earth during a period of "at least one thousand years, or a considerable space of time?" Let those Divines who teach the theory, solve the problem. We are told that, "according to published statistics, the population of the United States, since 1790, has doubled in 34 years; the British Islands in 49 1-2 years; France, besides its loss of over 2,000,000 by wars, &c., in 85 years; the German States, say 50 years; Russia, about 35 years. Average, less than 40 years." The millennium should offer an improvement, so the increase much faster. Now double one billion every forty years for "at least one thousand years," and tell us the result. Could they be accommodated upon our present earth though it were all land? A divine theory (?) so beautifully inconsistent and absurd, hardly deserves the name of "fable," and is utterly unworthy of belief.

GIVE ME A HOME.

O give me a home in the regions of bliss,
Where no sorrow shall ever invade,
Where the glory of Jesus eternally is,
And the pilgrim's deep woe is repaid.

I have jewels most dear journeying on to that land,
But they fade and they die at my side;
I would bear them, dear Lord, safely to thy right hand,
E'er to live, since a Savior hath died.

I have flowers precious too, but they fade at their birth,—
Their fragrance can refresh me no more;
I must lay them away in thy bosom, O Earth,
And march on till I gain the bless'd shore.

Take me home to the land of eternal delight,—
To Mount Zion, O haste! take me home,
Where the pilgrim shall walk with the angels in white,
And from blessedness shall never more roam.

I am weary and sad;—here death conquering reigns,
Friends' presence can cheer me no more;
Take me home, where their voices roll o'er the bright plains,
And all their deep sorrow is o'er.

The Discussion.

Doubtless all the readers of the Crisis, as well as thousands of others, have heard of the late discussion between the Editor of this paper and Dr. Litch of Philadelphia. The subject was one of the most interesting ever brought before the public. During the four consecutive evenings of the debate, the lecture-room was filled with a profoundly attentive audience, who listened with breathless interest to the earnest disputants as they brought up and arranged their order of attack and defence. It being of a comparatively recent date since I abjured the long established dogma of the everlasting torture of the wicked, therefore I marked with strict attention the champion of the affirmative as he intrenched himself within those old tenets, which antiquated superstition and imperfect understanding of the Scriptures have created, to the dishonor of God and the spreading of infidelity. A year ago I would have considered his position as invulnerable, and have thrown myself and my creed within his lines with perfect honesty and confidence, as undoubtedly Dr. Litch did, and calmly awaited the heaviest assault which could be brought to bear against me, assured that I had the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

In justice to Dr. Litch I would say, that he made the best disposition of his forces which he possibly could; and to a superficial eye occupied a favorable position. Public sympathy was in his favor, for he but echoed the time-hallowed errors of the masses, which have gone further to make infidelity than any other machine which the ingenuity of the devil or man could devise.

I could not, if I had time and space even, bring forth one out of every score of proofs which Eld. Grant, brought forward to clear the character of his Divine Master from the tremendous calumny which had long rested upon it. As he brought to bear each piece of his powerful battery, levelling it with the unerring precision of truth, it was grand to see the defenses of the opposition crumble like a tottering wall beneath the heavy discharge of siege artillery. The beautiful arrangement which characterized Eld. Grant's attack, evinced that he had taken all pains to arrange his materials according to their different classification, so that there was no hurry or confusion in hunting up direct evidence to bear upon a particular thesis. His tactics evinced consummate knowledge of the subject discussed, and served greatly to establish that victory which candor will admit was achieved.

One rare quality which distinguished the disputants in this important debate is deserving of notice, and at the close elicited a unaminous demonstration of approval from the audience, namely, a christian spirit, which was not for a moment ruffled or disturbed at the warmest and most keenly contested periods of the discussion. THE ARGUMENT AS TO "THE INNER MAN" IN ALL MEN.

The utter want of all plain testimony from Scripture to prove an undying "spiritual man" in all men, has left the advocates of that philosophical dogma no alternative but to abandon inspiration in the argument; or else accommodate certain far-fetched, allusive phrases for proof—taking sound for sense, and mere appearance for positive proof. Hence this phrase, "inner man" sounds as if it were exactly suitable for their purpose; and if this and like phrases were used of all men—or the unbelieving and disobedient in particular, it would be proof direct to the point. But the mental, moral, personal qualities of a natural man are all but parts and faculties of "the old man"—of man as he now exists, having the characteristics of "the earthy"—the fallen "first man Adam."

Again, "the Evil One—the spirit that now rules in the children of disobedience," cannot be the "inner man"—the "hidden man of the heart;" because this is "the new man"—resulting from the "renewing into the image of Him that made us."

Furthermore, the ruling spirit in unbelievers cannot be this "inner man—new man" spoken of—because it is older altogether than "the old man" himself! Nay, this is no man at all; but the "old serpent—the Devil," that seduced the first man into sin, sorrow and death; by consequence, as there was no new man in prototype till Jesus came, the second Adam. As no one is the subject of this renewing into the lost image of Him that made them save those who "receive Christ by faith"—who have Him "formed IN THEM," this is "the inner man" so highly commended. Such are "changed into the same IMAGE, from glory to glory!" Such are in each instance "a new creature." "They shall be like Him, for they shall see Him as He is"—the just made perfect, and bear the image of the Heavenly." Amen.

Gleanings.

BY M. D. W.

The following is from the pen of a correspondent of the Christian Observer.

"During the ministry of my venerable predecessor, who served the congregation to which I was called for more than thirty years, there lived about three miles from the meeting-house a pious woman of Dutch extraction, a native of Holland, who could neither speak nor understand a single word of English. And yet, strange as it may seem to many modern church-goers, she attended upon all the ordinances of the sanctuary with the same regularity and conscientiousness as if she understood every syllable that was uttered. She was a woman of devout and eminent prayerfulness. In the course of Divine Providence it happened that a strange minister, who was travelling through the country, was invited to preach. Her family informed her of the fact, and she prepared to go. The appearance of a strange minister in those times, when the country was new and sparsely settled, was an event of rare occurrence. She went to hear him, but before entering the vehicle which was to convey her thither, she retired for secret prayer, and while there on her knees she prayed earnestly that God would enable her to understand but one word, only one single word of the sermon. She entered the house of God as usual, all the introductory exercises were performed as usual, and as usual she understood nothing, but when the minister opened the Bible and named the text, she all at once understood it. From the text she found that she understood the opening words of the sermon then the sermon itself, and ever afterward when she frequented the house of God, she understood each discourse without difficulty, whether from the lips of strangers, or from those of her own pastor.

These facts, which by many may be regarded as wonderful, occurred in the town of H——, D—— county, state of New York. Her name, if my memory serves me right, was Montfort. All the church and neighborhood resounded with the fame of her piety. She lived some years after, within the bounds of the congregation, and died a few years before I was called to minister in the place. The elders of the church, who related the facts to me, were men of most worthy and upright character, highly esteemed in the church, and by the world."

"And God shall wipe away all Tears from their Eyes."

And can it be there is a country so free from care and the dark blight of sin; so entirely free from the sorrows and trials of this earth, that those who inhabit it shall never more have need to weep? Will the heart never more be filled with grief and sadness, nor the eye grow dim with tears? Thank God for the heart-cheering promise of a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness; where those who shall walk in its glorious light shall never know care, or feel a pain, for God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us strive to live in such a manner that when Jesus comes to make all things new, we may be found worthy to participate in the joys of that blessed place, where the inhabitants shall never more say, I am sick; for nothing that is hurtful or offensive shall ever enter there. O, glorious rest! is not the prize worth striving for? O, lift up your heads, and rejoice, ye tried and weary ones, for your redemption draweth nigh. Yonder is an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

Death shall be banished from the place!
Our Jesus there shall reign;
There we shall see him face to face,
And never sin again.

Popular Theory of the Millennium.

In the "London Encyclopedia" we find the following:—"The most common modern opinion confines all the predictions respecting what has been called the Millennium, to a spiritual reign of Christ, by means of the universal reception of the gospel, and has been thus stated:

1. That the Scriptures afford ground to believe that the church will arrive to a state of prosperity it has never enjoyed.

2. That this will continue at least one thousand years, or a considerable space of time, in which the work of salvation will be fully accomplished in the full extent and glory of it. In this time the world will be filled with real christians, and continue full by constant propagation, to supply the place of those who leave the world; there will be MANY THOUSANDS born and live on the earth, to each one that has been born and lived during the preceding six thousand years. So that if they who shall be born in that thousand years shall be all, or most of them saved, as they will be, there will be, on the whole, many thousands of mankind saved to one that shall be finally lost."

Is not this Universalism, at one end of the dispensation at least? And how utterly adverse to the teachings of "scripture" this "modern opinion."—

"The parable of the sower," Matt. 13: 3–8, 18–23, if it applies to the entire of the gospel dispensation, contradicts this theory. So does "the Parable of the tares of the field," Matt. 13: 24–30, 36–43, present a different view.

Christ teaches in contrariety to the above "peace and safety cry" as follows; (Matt. 7: 13,) "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat. Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and FEW there be that find it."

What a pity that "the most common opinion" among "modern" christians should thus flatly contradict Christ, by affirming that as a final result, "many thousands shall be saved to one that shall be finally lost," thus emphatically making the way to life broad, and the way to destruction extremely narrow. Why not with equal propriety go a little further in opposition to revealed truth, and so teach the salvation of all men, and dispense with the narrow way to destruction entirely?

The above theory being admitted, where will those millennial saints find room for residence, "the many thousands to each one born during the preceding six thousand years," all living on this earth during a period of "at least one thousand years, or a considerable space of time?" Let those Divines who teach the theory, solve the problem. We are told that, "according to published statistics, the population of the United States, since 1790, has doubled in 34 years; the British Islands in 49 1-2 years; France, besides its loss of over 2,000,000 by wars, &c., in 85 years; the German States, say 50 years; Russia, about 35 years. Average, less than 40 years." The millennium should offer an improvement, so the increase much faster. Now double one billion every forty years for "at least one thousand years," and tell us the result. Could they be accommodated upon our present earth though it were all land? A divine theory (?) so beautifully inconsistent and absurd, hardly deserves the name of "fable," and is utterly unworthy of belief.

GENEROSITY.—A great, a good, and a right mind is a kind of divinity lodged in flesh, and may be the blessing of a slave as well as of a prince: it came from heaven, and to heaven it must return; and it is a kind of heavenly felicity, which a pure and virtuous mind enjoys in some degree, even upon earth.

The Imperial Fiddler.

We are all more or less acquainted with the Universalist argument for the final salvation of all men, viz: that there is a "good in all,"—a remnant of virtue, a lingering trace of right capacity and feeling in the most hardened and desperate and abandoned. This argument gains some respectability in the fact that many who seemed hopelessly lost have been brought to repentance, to goodness, and to God. But these cases only throw what is possible in a particular instance, not what is probable. The general analogy of nature indicates that the recovery of that which is nigh unto extinction is the exception and not the rule. The Scriptures do not warrant the fond and sometimes admirable hope. Some of the ablest men holding that view have confessed that the Bible does not explicitly teach the salvation of all. Thus Dr. Noyes and T. Starr King. And the argument from the goodness and mercy of God can prove no more than a good and merciful God has expressly declared; nor that such a God will promote to eternal life a wayward and perverse child of man, instead of raising up from the stones better children to Abraham.

I don't know that I have the first unkind feeling toward Nero. From the bottom of my heart I pity him for the bloody path he trod to the throne of the Roman Empire, and for his ungainly ways after he had reached that dizzy height. Yet in my pitying detestation of the man, I sometimes cite his case in argument, thus: When you have proved that Socrates or Paul is immortal, you have need of some new argument to show that Nero is immortal. Or, when you have shown that John Howard was radically good, how will you show that Nero was not radically bad? Putting this last question to a Universalist the other day, something like the following dialogue ensued:

I. What think you of Nero, fiddling while Rome was burning?

U. Shakespeare says:

"The man that hath no music in his soul,
Is only fit for treasons, stratagems, and crimes."

But it is evident that Nero was no such man, for he could fiddle; and no man can play the fiddle unless he has music in his soul.

I. Ah indeed! That was a rare sort of soul-music,—that made him fiddle while Rome was burning down!

U. None the less real for that. Did not he play the fiddle in good harmony? and, for aught you know, exquisitely well?

I. And on such an occasion! Well, he had no reason to complain when he saw his dear people running frantic through the streets: "I have piped unto you and ye have not danced. I have mourned unto you and ye have not lamented."

U. The occasion made no difference. The music was in the man, or it could never have come out.

I. Better if it never had come out; for it is the common opinion—and I presume it is yours too—that Nero fiddled just because Rome burned; and that, if Rome had not been burning, Nero would not have been fiddling.

U. I have my doubts of that.

I. And well you may, for the sake of your theory. Still that is the account we have, accredited generally; and you don't know but it is too true, that if Rome had not been burning Nero would not just then have been fiddling.

U. But your argument that the bad will perish, proves too much. For we are all more or less bad. "There is none good."

I. Yet there's a real difference among men; some are growing better and others worse; and men of each class love to have it so. I fear that Nero wished to be no better than he was.

U. You should have charity for him. None are perfect. All need some charity,—you and I as well as the rest.

The veil of charity seemed to me rent at this appeal, stretched as it was to cover poor Nero's excessive need of it. But with due modesty for my own many imperfections, I could only hope that though Nero was bad beyond the hope of reform, he was not bad beyond God's power to punish him; that though apparently unfit to live, he might be allowed to die; and that he need not be burning while saints are singing, infinitely longer and more miserably than were the pangs of burning Rome. And we ask, not in charity but in justice, that the common estimate of Nero's guilt, or of the sinfulness of the best of them that perish, should be reduced within these ruinous limits. (Ezek. 18: 20.)

Tent Meeting in Brown County, Illinois.

This meeting was one of interest. I think I can safely say, the Devil hindered us as much, if not more than he did St. Paul on a certain occasion. I will give an outline. Bro. Chandler shipped the tent to Warsaw by boat, one week before the meeting. Through carelessness the tent went somewhere else,—did not come to Warsaw. The brethren sent some four times (forty miles each trip) for the tent, but no tent had arrived. I came to Brown Co. on Monday, brought my wife and little boy. Made arrangements for the tent. Met the brethren, selected ground, made stand, put up a boarding shanty, &c. Bro. Chandler came on Tuesday. The tent not coming, we held two meetings in different places on Tuesday evening.

The friends met on the ground, and after consultation, concluded the meeting must go through. They would not be defeated on that wise, although times were hard. They sent to Mt. Sterling Wednesday and purchased cloth, and returned about 4 o'clock, P. M. The sisters went to work putting it together, and before evening meeting part of the tent was pitched, and a goodly number out, and Bro. Lewis from Jersey preached to them.

On Thursday we commenced our regular meetings. Brn. Chandler, Scott and Lewis were present to preach the word. The preaching was good, clear, pointed, convincing, argumentative, doctrinal and also practical. The immortality of man connected with life only through Christ, and the sleep of the saints, was discussed to some length, which aroused many to inquire whether these things were so. Some convincing discourses were presented on the prophecies of Daniel and Revelations.

There was a very good number of brethren from abroad (surrounding counties,) gathered in with one mind and object, and the result is obvious—they were benefited.

The last of the meeting was well attended. On Sunday the number was estimated at ten or eleven hundred. I have held many tent meetings East, and some West, but I confess I never attended one where there was better order. Every man seemed to have an interest and manifested it by his conduct. There was some apprehension of disturbance, as there had been more or less at the campmeetings held in that region, but nearly to a man they conducted themselves circumspectly. The secret of the whole matter was, all were interested, and the congregation would sit one and a half hour and listen with deep attention to the speaker.

One fact I ought to mention, which shows truth is spreading, and that the efforts of our brethren who have scattered so many thousand publications broadcast over the land have not been in vain. A gentleman from Missouri, some 150 miles back from the Mississippi river, called as he was passing by, and made some inquiry in relation to the meeting. He concluded to stop one night and attend meeting. After meeting I had considerable conversation with him (as he stopped at the same house.) He remarked there was a large company of believers in the region where he lived. A Dr. —— (I do not now recollect his name; I wrote it down, but have not got it with me,) stood at the head. He had often heard the postmaster speak of them by way of complaint, for loading down the mail with so many books—called them (the postmaster) the soul-sleepers. This is encouraging to brethren, especially those that have toiled so long and sacrificed so much to get this all important truth before the people. I mean the doctrine of "life only through Christ."

But to return. Our meeting went well. The last day, especially, men looked sober and solemn, and began to inquire, what shall we do to be saved? The result I leave. Brn. Chandler and Scott left to hold meetings Monday afternoon and evening.

I will not write more on this topic now, only remark the brethren did nobly. All expenses were met. We expect by the blessing of God to see better times in that region.

The Soul.—No. 6.

"Feuardentius says, "I call most Lutherans new Sadducees, who, when they read in Luther's comments that the dead so sleep as to know and feel nothing, . . . say that the soul of man dies with the body. I call the great mass of the Calvinians new Epicureans, who, hearing daily from Calvin and his ministers that all blessed spirits are dead, are larvæ and shades with which we have no communion, exclaim, with the support of Calvin, 'Let us say that the soul [life] is extinct with the body, and forthwith purgatory and the Mass and the Romish priest will be done away.' I call those Anabaptists, now sprung from the Lutherans and Calvinians, new soul-slayers, who, in the year 1668, scattered through Poland the Cracow theses, of which the tenth is, 'We deny that any soul remains after death, but call that a device of Anti-Christ, to furnish his kitchen by the figment (fiction) of Purgatory and in the invocation of saints.'" Hud. p. 259.

It seems that some of the Lutherans as well as Luther, besides the Calvinians, had their eyes opened to see the monstrous error of the immortality of the soul, on which rests the whole superstructure of Papacy, and saw that if this dogma were removed, purgatory and prayers to saints would come to a perpetual end. And at the same time, the doctrine of eternal misery, Spiritualism and Swedenborgianism would tumble into everlasting ruins. O Lord, hasten the day when it will be done.

When men see that they are not immortal, they begin to inquire, how can I obtain immortality? What saith the Scriptures?" "By patient continuance in well doing." Rom. 2: 7.

Your Duty.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10.

This passage teaches us there is something to be done. We are not placed here as drones, to idle away our time, but to glorify God, and thus answer the end for which we were made.

We live in a world of sin, and it becomes us, as accountable creatures, to acquaint ourselves with truth and virtue, and thus become competent to distinguish between good and evil, right and wrong. The command to "do," has reference to right doing, right action. "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." "Let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace and pursue it."

Doing good, however, should not be confined to our friends. "If," says the Savior, "ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same." "If we have opportunity let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith."

The wisest and best of men have much to do in correcting the errors of their own hearts. How apt we are to condemn in others what we approve in ourselves. We are naturally selfish, and it is only through the aid of the word of truth and the influence of the Spirit of grace, that we see ourselves as we really are. To become instructors, to act the part of true reformers, we must first learn to govern ourselves. We may blame our fellows for avarice, while we are guilty of prodigality; or, we may accuse others of sectarianism, while we are narrow, contracted, bigoted and selfish. To remove the beam from our own eye, is a great and good work, which, when fully accomplished, enables us to work for the good of our neighbor.

We are placed in community for mutual aid and assistance. No man "liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." To influence men to the right, and save them from the snares and evils of time, is a godly work. The evils of communities are traceable to individuals, and hence, reformation of the masses is only effected through individual effort. As the number of reformers increases, they may combine, in order, the more effectually, to advance the principles of virtue and religion. "Union is strength." It is not only a privilege, but a duty. Some persons are reformers in "tongue," but not in deed. They can expatiate, suggest, find fault, brood over the evils of community, and act the part of the man in the gospel, who said, "I go, and went not." But these are just the men we do not need. We can get along without them just as well as not. We want men with large souls, true hearts, those who will not be deterred from duty through fear or flattery. On these we can depend, and knowing our strength, we can safely calculate the results.

The manner of doing good is referred to in the text. What the "hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Some people, in preaching the gospel, studiously avoid giving offence. This they do oftentimes by sacrificing principle; they pander to the prejudices of the hearer, and are what the Bible calls "men pleasers." When they tell the truth, it is told in such a way that but few, if any, believe it. There is an indefiniteness in their arguments, which fails to convince the hearer; a want of pathos, which freezes the heart. Soul-stirring truth should be told in a soul-stirring manner. To benefit men, we must make them believe that we are seeking their good; then, but not till then, shall we gain their attention. To do with the might relates to all of life. How much might be accomplished if our minds were always occupied, and our time all employed. If we had acted on this principle in time past, we should now know much that we do not know; we could have done much good, that we, with our limited knowledge, cannot now do.

Another consideration urged for action, immediate action, is, because there is "no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest." "Now is the accepted time, behold now is the day of salvation." "Procrastination is the thief of time." Delays are dangerous. The present moment is all we can call our own; the future belongs to God. The present is a life of probation. Mercy is confined to this state. With this dispensation, end the offers of salvation through Christ. How important, then, to do with our might what our hand finds to do.

For the Crisis.

A Present Help.

"When the enemy shall come in like a flood the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him." The Apostle Peter compares Satan to a roaring lion that continually goes about seeking whom he may devour. It is his constant study to harass and perplex God's children, but, blessed be God, he can proceed no further than he is pleased to permit him; and if he should come in like a flood, God will take care that his Spirit shall lift up a standard against him.

Remember, my reader, it is no sin to be tempted; the sin is in receiving or agreeing with the temptation. Christ himself was tempted, but he resisted the tempter; and it is thy privilege to fly unto Christ under every temptation. To tell him thy troubles, implore his assistance, and he will take care that even temptations shall be among those "all things" which shall work together for thy good. Forget not the exhortation of the Lord—"draw nigh to God and he will draw nigh to you; resist the devil and he will flee from you." "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation." "There has no temptation taken you but such as is common to all men;" "but God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able."

This is the christian's chiefest joy,
His faithful God is ever nigh,
Whose rod and staff and promised grace

Religion at Home.—"Let them learn first," says Paul, "to show religion at home." Religion begins in the family. One of the holiest sanctuaries on earth is home. The family altar is more venerable than any altar in the cathedral. The education of the soul for eternity begins by the fireside. The principle of love, which is carried through the universe, is first unfolded in the family.

For the Crisis.

Letter from A. Ross.

To my inquiring friends scattered abroad, I would say through the Crisis,—I am yet striving, with the ability God has given me, to do his will. And, amid all my reverses of feeling and circumstances, I do believe my highest ambition is to please the Lord.

My pathway in the past sometimes looks mysterious to me. I would not presume to say that all I have passed through has been of God; but there are many incidents which, to me, look very much like the providential dealings of that Divine Being who watches over his creatures to do them good. I am more convinced of this when I think of the circumstances of my childhood, and the influences which then surrounded me. Though to some extent blest with religious instruction, and the restraining influences of christianity, yet my associations were such that I found myself contracting habits of life, which, if continued in, must have proved my ruin inevitably. Thus at death's dark door I was lying when first the sound vibrated upon my ear, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh." I have said it a great many times, and I repeat it again. I thank God for ever being blest with an opportunity of listening to the advent doctrine. What might have been my condition today, had not that been the case, I do not know. But one thing I do know; it was the special means, in the hands of God, of awakening me to a sense of the importance of giving immediate attention to the salvation of my soul. This was in the fall of 1842.

I sought the Lord both day and night,
He heard my prayer and gave me light;
Filled me with joy. I love to cry,
Behold the heavenly Bridegroom's nigh!

From that time I remained subject to my parents until twenty-one years of age, when I became convinced that God had assigned me a labor to perform in a public capacity; and though the struggles of my mind were great, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision; neither did I count my life dear to me, so that I might finish my course with joy and the ministry committed to me, to testify the gospel of the grace of God. Since then, twelve long years of travel and anxious waiting have passed away.

I preached the Advent in 1854, concerning which I have no confession to make, save I was disappointed; the argument proved a failure; but what I did in connection with that movement, I did in all good conscience. Since the passing of that point of time, although ofttimes in sadness, I have continued to travel and proclaim the truth of the speedy advent of Christ in connection with personal holiness, which I believe to be the necessary preparation for that event. Though disappointment has been my lot in connection with many others, I can see no reason for relinquishing my faith; but, to the contrary, much to establish it. Evidences are abundant that we are near the final climax of all prophetic delineation.

Read the outlines of the history of our world, marked in the great metallic image of Dan., 2d chapter, or the same series of events more minutely detailed in the 7th, 8th and 11th chapters of Dan.; and who can avoid seeing that we are witnessing the development of the last feature of the fourth monarchy power? If so, the next great event to be looked for in order is the universal destruction of all the Gentile governments of earth, symbolized by the stone smiting the image upon the feet, grinding all to powder; when the stone will become a great mountain and fill the whole earth. Or, if we pass from the prophecy of Dan., so replete, to that of the Apocalyptical visions of John,—which may be looked upon as a history of the church during the existence of the Great Beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly, the destruction of which is marked by the sounding of the seventh angel,—we find ourselves occupying a period of time between the sounding of the sixth and seventh angel, the brevity of which is marked by the term "quickly." These prophecies speak too plainly to be misunderstood. They throw around me an everlasting bulwark of strength.

How can I question the truth of the speedy advent of Christ in the face of such heaven-inspired declarations, without betraying a sceptical mind?—I cannot renounce my faith, nor compromise my principles. If by my adherence to these things sympathy be denied, and men shut up their bowels of compassion, then let me enjoy the testimony of a good conscience, of not having handled the word of God deceitfully. I prefer it to the ease and luxury of the hireling who sails on the smooth surface of popular influence, and knows nothing of the heart yearnings of the sorrow-stricken soul who cries day and night for deliverance.

Dear brethren and sisters:—Some of you I may never see again in the flesh. I hope you will hold fast your profession, knowing this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand. Suffer me to exhort you in the language of the good apostle John, "Little children, love one another." By this, says our blessed Master, shall all men know that ye are my disciples. If in anything you have done wrong, remember it is manly to repent of that wrong. If others have wronged you, remember it is Christ-like to endure patiently and commit the keeping of your souls to him who judgeth righteously.

He that can't forgive a wrong,
Should have no wrongs to be forgiven.

It is an hour of temptation. There is much religion abroad of a superficial character. I would entreat you not to step upon the uncertainties of men, but cling to that hope which is like an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

Albion Ross.

For the Crisis.

Do You Love God?

If any one should ask us this question, we should all answer—many of us from the depth of the heart—yes, we that profess the name of Christian all think that the love of God is in our hearts; we feel from the heart, that God and his truth are all we have left when the cold blasts of this uncharitable world are over, and we are weak and faint from the conflict with the world, the flesh, and the devil.

It is our daily prayer, oh, fill our hearts with thy love. The word of truth teaches us that unless we have this love in our hearts, we cannot be found of God in peace or gain eternal life. The great Apostle to the Gentiles said, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels, and have not charity, I am become as a sounding brass and tinkling cymbal." And he further states, that although a man may be the most perfect and self-sacrificing martyr, all these things without love will be nothing; love is the all-important thing, the capstone to the whole; without it the gospel itself would prove a failure, and without it in all our hearts we must be lost forever. Doth it not become us as christians to look to ourselves, and see if we have the fruits of this? Saith God's word, "love worketh no ill to his neighbor; it suffereth long and is kind; it envieth not; is not easily provoked; thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things."

Let us see that these things are remembered by us. If we are engaged in slandering one another—in watching for evil reports, and crying what we deem the faults of our brethren and sisters upon the housetops, are we showing the fruits of the love of God? "Charity thinketh no evil." If, when we hear a slanderous report, or see anything which we feel inclined to censure, we make all possible haste to run with it to our neighbor, and spread the report; or, if we are watching for things to condemn, do we fulfill the law of love? "it rejoiceth not in evil." Can we love God and do these things? Let the question come home to our hearts now; let us square ourselves by God's word now, while we may. Oh, let us, for the sake of Him who groaned, suffered and died on Calvary for our sins, cast from us as a deadly viper these things. Christ has died for the world; the most of mankind are rushing on to destruction, regardless of the solemn truth, "Behold, I come quickly." Souls are perishing: the judgment is coming. Already do we hear the distant notes of warning; and what are we doing? Evil surmising, backbiting, slandering, and worldly-mindedness, will drag us to perdition, if we do not awake. Oh, may God have mercy and help us to overcome!

Hark! from the distance we catch the first notes of warning; "Behold, the Judge standeth at the door!" The world's history is closing; nations are fast preparing the way for the King of kings, and soon He whose right it is shall come to take the kingdom.

Have we time for these petty strifes? God forbid! Let us "love one another with pure hearts fervently." Look to God. Learn of Jesus, and remember that the "greatest of all is charity." Then when Christ shall claim his throne, he shall say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

For the Crisis.

Two-Horned Beast.

Speaking further upon this subject, Mr. Smith remarks, page 34, "These representations all imply that Antichrist was to be another power beside the papal hierarchy." "The present state of this hierarchy utterly forbids that she can be that vast terrific power, in terrible array against Christ, in the last days."

On the 35th page the writer remarks, "Antichrist, or the great power predicted in Dan. 2: 36, is at or near the time of the end, to be engaged in a war with the king of the North and the king of the South. No such event as this was ever fulfilled with respect to the Papal power; nor can it ever be according to any present probability. This one consideration must afford a full decision that Antichrist, the terrible power of the last days, is distinct from and subsequent to the papal power."

Speaking of a people impatient of moral restraint he says, "Such a people would need only an association of subtle, infidel philosophers, under the instigation of the old serpent, to instigate a scheme which would give birth to the Antichrist of the last time." He paraphrases 1 Jno. 2: 18 thus: "Ye are assured in various predictions that a terrible power, which may properly be styled Antichrist, on account of his enmity against the christian cause, shall arise in the last days, and shall bring upon himself swift destruction. So that the appearance of that wicked power shall be a certain token of its then being the last time with the enemies of the church," &c. Page 38, "It was their gross infidelity then which he (John) calls the spirit of Antichrist. His inference that the spirit of Antichrist, then existing, indicated that it was the last hour with its subjects, was deduced from this fact, which he understood to be the truth; viz., that the rise of Antichrist was to be but a short time, like an hour, before his utter destruction. . . . We arrive then at this conclusion, from the remarks of St. John, that Antichrist is another power besides the papal hierarchy; and that his rise was to be but a short time before the battle of the great day."

Again, after referring to Paul, Peter and Jude on this same subject, he says concerning 2 Tim. 3: 1, (p. 39) that "the Apostle makes an advance and predicts the rise of another and later power, and of a different character. The prediction respects that vast influence of infidelity in the christian world which attends the rise and progress of Antichrist. 'This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come.' This know, over and above what I before predicted concerning the papal apostacy; this event is to be subsequent to that, viz., in the last days. For

"Now as Jannes and Jambres (the pagan magicians of Egypt) withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds and reprobate concerning the faith. This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy. Without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good. Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts; Ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Here we have a striking description of the malignant passions of men let loose from the restraints of religion and of a good education; as was to be the case in the last days, or in the reign of infidelity. Even these characters, after they have fixed their characteristic of infidelity, may adopt some trite form of godliness; having found the necessity of it for their existence in the world; or to cover their enormities, and propagate their sentiments with more fatal effect. And their clandestine operations in the propagation of their principles, are strikingly hinted by their creeping into houses; as well as their fair, philosophical pretensions, as learners; ever learning: and the corrupt state of their hearts is described, and their utter hostility to the truth." H. Pratt.

For the Crisis.

From Eld. J. Blain.

Bro. Grant:—In the Methodist Quarterly Review for Oct. 5th, are some remarks worthy of notice. The writer, in reviewing C. F. Hudson's book, and speaking of "destruction," says:—

"Indeed, when we consider the immense amount of occult and subtle Universalism, pervading not only the age but the congregation and the church, we have sometimes thought that there is perhaps a large class of minds whom this doctrine—substituting a less for a greater evil—may rescue from doctrinal and moral ruin."

We see evidence here that the church is learning how their creeds are spreading Universalism, and that "a large class" may be reached and saved by our views who cannot be by theirs. J. Blain.

From Bro. D. N. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—I have attended the Discussion upon future punishment, and was much edified. I have no doubt but great good will result from it. I think there are other questions of equal importance, that might be discussed with profit; and I think it is in every respect the best way to bring them before the public; also, for the good of the church to forbear bringing them into the prayer meeting, as is too often the case. I know some of the brethren think a prayer meeting is not of much importance unless a variety of doctrines, &c., are introduced; but sad experience has shown that such a course has been the means of distracting, and, in some cases, dividing churches. We read of meetings where every one hath a doctrine, a psalm, an exhortation, &c.; we also read of meetings for special prayer, as in the case of Peter in prison. Prayer was made without ceasing for him. And at the day of Pentecost they were all of one accord. It is not probable that any doctrine was introduced into any of these meetings. We have also in our own time many proofs of answer to fervent, effectual prayer for revivals, &c.

I can say respecting the cause of religion in this city, that as near as I can judge, from expressions in prayer and exhortation, they are looking for a greater revival this season than was experienced last winter. I notice that in the meetings considerable time is spent in prayer for some definite object. The principal burden is, however, the outpouring of the Spirit. May their prayers be answered. Yours, &c.,

D. N. Smith.

Sorrow on the Sea.—The iron steamship Austria, from Hamburg, having on board freight, mostly of silks and velvets, valued at $850,000, and about 600 persons, mainly Germans, emigrating to America, caught fire September 13, from culpable negligence in fumigating the steerage with burning tar, and was totally destroyed, only 89 of those on board being saved. The loss of life is greater than has occurred in any previous disaster to ocean steamers, through the panic and overpowering terror that prevailed, although it was furnished with abundant means for rescuing most on board. The Austria is the eleventh ocean steamer that has been lost since the Atlantic steamships began to run in 1838. Those lost are the following: the President, with 130 lives; Arctic, with 300 lives; Pacific, with 240 lives; San Francisco, with 160 lives; Central America, with 387 lives; Independence, with 140 lives; Yankee Blade, with 75 lives; City of Glasgow, with 420 lives; Tempest, with 150 lives; Lyonnais, with 160 lives; and the Austria, with 511: making a total of 2,673 lives that have been lost, while the value of the vessels and cargoes is estimated at $10,500,000. The President, Pacific, City of Glasgow, and Tempest were never heard from; the Arctic, San Francisco and Central America foundered; the Independence and Yankee Blade were wrecked; and the Lyonnais was sunk by a collision.

Beheading a Dead Christian.—At Erzroum, in Armenia, no rain having fallen this summer, the Turkish clergy could devise no better expedient to propitiate the heavens, than the infliction of capital punishment on a Giaour or Christian, and being merciful in their management, had the dead body of an unbeliever disinterred and decapitated. This proceeding has actually caused a greater sensation in Asia Minor, than the every day occurrence of ordinary beheading; and added to the tumult all around Lebanon, and the general outbreak of Ottoman fanaticism in the East, the state of affairs is truly alarming.—Boston Herald.

Blossoms in November.—On Friday we had laid on our table the blossoms from an apple tree, that has flowered three times this year, and also from a pear tree, that has been twice in bloom this year.—Newburyport Herald.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in South Livermore, Me., Oct. 9th, 1858, Sarah, wife of Silas Timberlake, aged 31 years.

It is with deep sorrow that we announce the death of our beloved sister. She was suddenly called to leave her friends, but they sorrow not as those that have no hope, for they have the blessed assurance that she sleeps in Jesus. She experienced religion last winter and united with the church in that place; and from that time to the day of her death, manifested a love for Christ and his cause, and adorned her profession with a well ordered life and godly conversation. She leaves a husband and one child, an aged father and mother, and two sisters, with a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn their loss. The writer had the privilege of visiting at her house one week before she died. She was then out of health, but able to attend meeting. She was ever ready to minister to the necessities of God's children, and what she did was done willingly and cheerfully. Her integrity, benevolence, kindness and christian character, are known to all with whom she associated. She possessed a remarkably mild and amiable disposition, and was beloved by all who knew her. The church deeply feel the loss of their beloved sister and sympathize with the bereaved companion in his affliction. The hope of the gospel has sustained him thus far, and our earnest prayer is, that it may continue to comfort and cheer his heart until he shall meet all the loved ones in that better land.

A discourse by the writer on the occasion from Job 14: 14, 15, to a large and sympathizing congregation. May the grace of God comfort the husband and parents, with all the mourning friends, and bring them to enjoy the blessing of everlasting life in the world to come.

"Cease, stricken hearts, no longer mourn
For her whose health it fled;
Our sister in the grave is laid,
She resteth with the dead.

Those dear loved lips have softly bade
Their long, their last good bye,
And gentle hands have smoothed her brow,
And closed her faded eye.

O, weep not that your cherished one
Has found rest in the tomb;
For in the paradise of God
She'll yet in beauty bloom.

Then weep not for the dear loved one
Whose earthly race is run,
But meekly bow before the Lord,
And say, "Thy will be done."

The Revolution in Guayamas.—Washington, Nov. 14.—A private letter received here from Guayamas, Oct. 10th, in giving an account of the revolution there, confirmatory of the recently published statements, says that Capt. Stone, with his surveying party, consisting of about thirty Americans, occupied three houses in the centre of the town, between the opposing parties. If an attack had been made on him, he would have hoisted the American flag, and fought under it, being well armed, having plenty of ammunition, and a brig in the harbor mounting two 9-pounders to retreat to if necessary. Lieut. Mowry was ready to lend assistance with his own men. The civil war ended by the surrender of the authorities to the rebel party, when, after getting what they demanded, and obtaining a guaranty of immunity from prosecution, the rebels reinstated the authorities. The Americans were not attacked, owing to their firm position and their declining to surrender their houses to the rebel leaders.

MAN AS HE WAS AND IS.

BY ELD. S. S. BREWER.

It was from earth that man was made
And placed in Eden's bowers;
In godlike purity arrayed,
With freedom of his powers.
In spotless innocence he stands
In manhood at his birth,
The masterpiece of God's own hands,
The Lord of all the earth.

Fair trees in grandeur round him stood,
All beauteous to his eye;
The tree of evil and of good,
With fruit was bending nigh.
The Lord God then to man did say,
To eat that never try;
For if thou dost, that very day
In dying thou shalt die.

The woful deed, alas, was done,
The joys of Eden riven;
The wail of sorrow then begun,
Dark gloom then mantled heaven.
With guilt and dread poor Adam flies,
Stricken with grief and fear,
Till weary worn, at last he dies
The death he bought so dear.

Returned to earth in death he sleeps,
His breath with God who gave;
While o'er his fall poor mortals weep
Till with him in the grave.
Earth's millions sleep in death's dark gloom,
Until that morning break;
Creation then shall know its doom,
God's saints the kingdom take.

Letters Illustrative of Christian Experience.—No. 2.

MY DEAR SISTER.—I see your difficulty, I think. You want to feel that God blessed you, to have an inward assurance of the fact, before you believe it. Do you not see that you are reversing God's order? What saith the Word? "He that believeth, hath the witness in himself." Now you say, "let me have the witness, and then I can believe." You admit that you have consecrated yourself fully to the Lord, so far as you know. Perhaps you have, except this one thing, viz., your feelings. Let me tell you an incident just here, illustrative, I think, of your present position.

While on a visit to a neighboring town I strayed into a female prayer meeting. During the exercises, I became much interested in the case of a young lady, who with much earnestness besought the Lord for a pure heart. The Spirit seemed mightily to aid her, and she approached the hallowed altar, and thereon presented herself a "living sacrifice," but, instead of believing just then that while thus presented, it became an "holy and acceptable" offering "through Jesus Christ," she plead with intense fervor that she might be accepted and saved. Not exercising faith, she of course failed to receive and arose unblest. A week from that time, I again went to the prayer meeting. The sister was present, and with still more intense desire, she poured forth her supplications for a pure heart.

Again she presented her offering, and, seemingly, with an importunity not to be denied, she entreated God to receive, and bless her. I saw the blessing just in reach, it was but to believe, and all she asked was hers. So intense were my own feelings, that I sought to bear her on my own faith to the fountain, or rather to lead her to plunge therein, for she already stood at its brink. I mingled my petitions audibly with her own, and the Spirit made intercession, but alas, she hesitated, she feared to step out on the simple promise, but waited for God to seal the witness on her heart, and then without any risk, she could believe the work was done. She turned from the point, and began to pray for other objects; the Spirit grieved, no longer aided her supplications, and with a deeply burdened heart she arose from her position and sat down.

When the meeting closed, I passed with her from the house, and addressed to her the question, "Why did you not believe when you made the consecration, and asked God to accept it, that he did so?" She replied, "I want to feel that God accepts me, before I believe it." "You want the inward evidence before you comply with the terms upon which it is promised, then," said I. God says, "He that believeth hath the witness," but you want the witness first before exercising the faith. Now you consecrated yourself to God fully, so far as you had light, and he has promised that when you do this, he will receive you, and will be a Father to you, and you shall be his daughter. Now you must believe when you thus dedicate yourself to him, that he does receive you, because he has promised to." "But I want some other evidence than that, before I can believe," was her reply. "My dear friend," said I, "supposing you were in very destitute circumstances, and I have it in my power to assist you. I say to you, If you will go home with me, I will give you ten dollars, would you go?" "O yes!" said she. "But why would you go?" "To get the money." "What evidence have you that you would obtain the money, if you went?" "The evidence of your word, I do not believe that you would tell me a lie." "Now, my dear sister, look at it. Here I am an entire stranger to you, and might deceive you; yet on the simple testimony of my word, you would accompany me to my home, confidently believing that I would bestow upon you the sum promised. Now God makes you a promise—he cannot lie, yet you ask for additional evidence, before you can believe. Just exercise the same simple trust in God's promise that you do in mine, and the blessing is yours."

We parted near her home, and ere I reached the place of my destination, I received the witness that she was blest. The glory came, and filled my own soul, and I shouted aloud, Glory to God. A few evenings after, we again met in a social meeting. Her tongue was loosed to speak forth the praises of Him who had redeemed her. With a glad heart, she told me of her deliverance. "When I reached home, I went directly to my room, and there took God at his word, and the blessing came, and my soul was filled." From that time she loved to witness to the short and simple way of faith.

And now, dear sister, have I touched the point at which you are halting? If not, I have much mistook, and must wait for further light before I speak again.

Yours in love,
MARY D. WELLCOME.

From Bro. F. Bezza.

BRO. GRANT:—I am here in this sectarian region entirely alone, but am endeavoring to hold forth the truth to the people from time to time. There are many of my neighbors and acquaintances that believe in the destruction of the wicked, and the sleep of the dead, the saint's inheritance on the earth; but they do not seem disposed to acknowledge those great truths publicly, and to take a stand with me; for they know that I am alone. If I only had the means in my possession, how willingly would I go to some place where there is a church not afraid to speak for the truth, but would stand by and encourage an effort to spread the truth before the people. I am often sad when I read of many of the preaching brethren doing so much good in the vineyard of the Lord, and here I am obliged to stay; but I intend, just as soon as a door is open for me, to leave here and go elsewhere, or travel. I think that I should do so, and I am willing to do it. I think God wants me to do more for his cause and glory than I can do under existing circumstances.

And I will here say, that if there is a place that I could get to live among brethren and preach the word to sinners, if I could be informed of such a place, I would endeavor to go there. I hope the brethren will remember us at the throne of grace.

Your brother, striving for deliverance from sin and the corruptions of this age,
FRANCIS BEZZA.

SUCCESS.—Every man must patiently abide his time. He must wait, not in listless idleness, not in useless pastime, not in querulous dejection; but in constant, steady and cheerful endeavor; always willing, fulfilling, and accomplishing his task; that when the occasion comes he may be equal to the occasion. The talent of the success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, without a thought of fame. If it comes at all, it will come because it is deserved, not because it is sought after. It is very indiscreet and troublesome ambition which cares so much about fame; about what the world says of us; to be always looking in the face of others for approval; to be always anxious about the effect of what we do or say; to be always shouting, to hear the echoes of our own voices.—Longfellow.

☞ The laboring man in the present age, if he does not read, has more helps to wisdom than Solomon had.

☞ It is by the daily lives of christians that Christ is either honored or dishonored.—Martha Whiting.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

BRO. EDITOR:—I am down East among the Islands of the sea, which have the promise of being converted to God. And it would seem the time had nearly come, when it would be fulfilled; for here is a great inquiry after truth, a great willingness to hear. Among these Islands, they never have had the Advent truths held forth, yet many have got hold of the general ideas held by the Advent people. Here are six townships, where I have the privilege of appointing meetings and giving lectures, and when I hold forth the simple bible truths, (the ideas are new to many, yet not to all,) it sets people to inquiring are these things so? and some of them have found that these things are so; others are convicted on the subject; others are opposed.

I have been among the Islands thirteen weeks, and have given three lectures on every Sabbath but two, and on one Sabbath gave four, and very frequently on other evenings. I visit families all the time I am able, and have a great many questions to answer, mostly in relation to the state of the dead between death and the Resurrection, and the final end of the wicked. These subjects are very plain and simple to me; I have been studying them for eighteen years, with a sincere desire to know the truth on these subjects; and I think I have the truth. It does me good to see these long standing errors giving way to the truth of God's word, which must and will gain ground. The seed is sown all over the land, and the fruit is beginning to appear. I find many who have come to a knowledge of these doctrines from their own study, persons of independent minds, not held in sectarian bondage.

I have a very large field to labor in. If I had a dozen bodies I could find employment for them in these Islands. Here is a good chance for any of our brethren, whose hearts are all on fire, ready to burst for want of vent; here you can speak and find people to hear. But you must come with your souls full of love to God and man, with a willingness to spend and be spent, looking for no reward but what comes from your Master. That is sure, viz: homes, friends, houses, lands, fathers, mothers, brothers, and sisters, every where; yes, and with persecution; and in the world to come, eternal life. This much is sure; then they will find very kind and hospitable friends, open houses and open hearts.

I am well, body and mind. I love the work. I enjoy it. My reward is enough; I ask no more. My soul is like a well-watered garden; and my feet are like hind's feet. By my God I can run through a troop, and by my God I can leap over a wall.

Pamphlets and tracts on the state of the dead, are greatly needed here. Could not our friends in Boston, or elsewhere, just send me a bundle, if it was not more than a dozen; much good might be done by them. I have found a few are like missionaries, going every where preaching. Brethren, help us.

Yours, BENJ. SPALDING.

BEAUTIFUL.—The following lines are from the pen of Geo. D. Prentice:—

"Why is it that the rainbow and the cloud come over us with a beauty that is not of earth, and then to pass away and leave us to muse on faded loveliness? Why is it that the stars that hold their nightly festival around the midnight throne, are placed above the reach of our limited faculties, forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? And why is it that the bright forms of human beauty are presented to our view and then taken from us, leaving the thousand streams of affection to flow back in almighty torrents upon the human heart? We are born for a higher destiny than that of earth. There is a land where the stars will be set out before us like islands that slumber in the ocean, and where the beautiful beings that pass before us like a meteor, will stay in our presence forever."

PROCRASTINATION.—Near the close of his life Patrick Henry laid his hand on the Bible, and said to a friend, "Here is a book worth more than all others; yet it is my misfortune never to have read it with proper attention until lately." William Pitt, when he came to die, said: "I fear that I have, like many others, neglected my religious duties too much to have any ground to hope that they can be efficacious on my death-bed."

Two-Horned Beast.

Much has been said and written concerning this power; and yet, nothing has appeared to satisfy the inquiring mind relative to this power, to that certainty which has been obtained concerning other powers symbolized by other beasts in the books of Revelation and Daniel. And never has there been so great desire to hear concerning this two-horned beast power as at the present. Therefore, after delaying for months to hear from some one more capable of doing justice to this most important subject, I am constrained by earnest solicitation, and a sincere desire to benefit the church, and faithfully to do my Master's will, to give what light I have upon this subject; praying the Spirit of the Lord may "guide us into all truth and show us things to come."

The Dragon of Rev. 12 seems to have been, or rather was the Devil manifested through Pagan Rome; for we read that when Michael had cast out this Dragon, the heavens are called upon to rejoice, and the inhabitants of earth to mourn because the Devil is come down unto them having great wrath. Again, ver. 11, he is called the accuser of our brethren which accused them before our God day and night. That the Devil has been permitted to accuse our brethren before the throne, we have testimony in abundance. In Job 1:9–11 we find him accusing Job of serving God for profit, and that he (the best of God's servants,) should curse him if any one would touch his property, or his person. He stood at the right hand of Joshua, the high priest, to resist him, (Zech. 3: 1,) and continued his accusations against the church, and even against the Son of God himself, till he (the Son) arose triumphant to the Father; at which time Michael with his angels is to make war on him (the Devil) and his angels, which resulted in the casting out of this accuser from heaven, as before remarked.

That this "war in heaven" was at, or after the ascension of Christ, and before the ten persecutions commenced, we have the fact, that when he was cast down to the earth, (v. 13,) he persecuted the woman that brought forth the man child. And this persecution was under Pagan Rome and before the church fled into the wilderness. Michael had had one conflict personally with the Devil about the body of Moses, so says Jude; and being successful he is permitted with his angels to drive from "before our God," and cast down to the earth, the Devil and his angels; and through old Paganism (for the Devil always works through mediums) ten bloody persecutions follow. And after Constantine espoused the cause of the church, and stopped that bloody human sacrifice, the Devil raised up another power, symbolized by a leopard beast, to destroy the church of God.

After the interposition of the Lord in behalf of the church in the days of Constantine, there was an interval before the rise of the leopard beast, in the which the church had rest. But this was of short continuance. Paganism, says Prof. Brittain, "laid hold on spiritualism." Yes, and so have the mediums of the Devil ever since.

But the Leopard beast comes up, and the same Devil that had accused our brethren before God,—the same Devil that was cast out of heaven into the earth,—the very Satan that our Savior saw in prospect as lightning falling from heaven; gave him his power, his seat, and great authority. That is, the power and seat and great authority that the Leopard beast possessed was given him by the Devil, and he has ever used it to promote his cause. Through this power he was to operate forty-two months—to make war on the saints. And how lamentably true has been the fulfillment of this prophecy. Over fifty millions have fallen martyrs to this cruel power. And all this to establish that doctrine of the Devil, "ye shall be as Gods"–Spiritualism. A spiritual Christ that did not die—a spirit or soul in man that cannot die; were the principles upon which that Papal power arose. But it has had its day. The Judgment has set on that power, and his dominion has been taken away. The saints are no longer under his cruel torture.

But this was not the last power with which the church would have to struggle. After that Satan had failed to exterminate the woman in her wilderness state by means of the papacy, he being still wroth with the woman went to make war on the remnant of her seed which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ. The remnant of her seed must then suffer under another than the papal power, yet still under the supervision of the Dragon (Devil.) And here let me quote at length from a dissertation on the prophecies by Ethan Smith, A. M., published in 1811. On page 33, section 3, of this work, under the head, "Antichrist another power beside the papal hierarchy," we have the following:

"But the papal hierarchy was not the only, or last power predicted to be raised up in judgment to the wicked world, as too many have seemed to imagine. A power was to be raised up, for the execution of judgment on the wicked nations, to destroy that Mother of harlots, to hate her, and to burn her with fire.

Surely this terrible power was to be subsequent to the reign of popery; and distinct from Popery. The characteristics of this new Power or antichrist are such as were never applicable to Popery. The Romish hierarchy never denied the Father or the Son; did not deny that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh. The Pope professed the highest veneration for God and Christ and the christian religion. And though his profession was hypocritical, yet it having been uniform from the beginning, and thus constituting a characteristic, it evinced that he was not the Antichrist of the last times. For it is the essential characteristic of the latter, that he denies the Father and the Son; denies that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh. 1 John 2: 22.

The predictions noted in this Dissertation decide that Antichrist was to be a terrible atheistical power, to arise in the last days, and to bring upon itself swift destruction. He ascendeth from the bottomless pit, and goeth into perdition. His judgment lingereth not and his damnation slumbereth not. His ruin is nearly connected with his origin. His reign is thus to be of short continuance. But could this have been said of the Papal hierarchy? Surely not. That was to continue for many centuries; even 1260 years.

This subsequent power to the Papacy is introduced by John in Rev. 13: 11 thus: And I beheld another beast coming up out the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spoke as a dragon. That there might not be any mistake about the rise of this power being after the forty-two months beast, he further says, (v. 12,) "And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast BEFORE him." H. PRATT.

The Fall of Man.

The devil, having departed from the beginning, and become an enemy to the truth, immediately determined upon war, if by any means he might dethrone his Sovereign, and overthrow his kingdom: and as man was associated with the Lord Christ, and stood with him in the interest and on the party of the government, his ground became, as it were, the outpost or frontier of the empire, and presented the natural point for commencing the attack.

As man was made in the image of God, and crowned with his glory and honor, it might be supposed that the mysterious character of his dominion extended to an ascendancy over the angels; for, indeed, without any exception, he was by the Lord God set over the works of his hands; against man, therefore, this proud, disobedient and rebellious spirit rose up, as against his Lord and Sovereign. And as man had begun to exercise the highest acts of sovereignty, by giving names to the creatures, which were among the first exercises in a way of administration that existed in the creation, he was considered as standing high upon the ground of this dominion; so that, in this his wonderful union with his Creator, the reasons are apparent why the devil aimed at man his first blow.

And here, again, we may view and admire the depth of the divine counsel, that the same circumstances in the state of man which occasioned his overthrow, led to his recovery, viz., that the matter which raised against him an enemy, was a cause of infinite value and an interest in common between him and the Lord Christ, in which the Lord his maker had the greatest share!

The serpent, which for powers of intelligence was above all the beasts of the field, was the proper instrument to be employed in carrying this dark design into effect; for which purpose, the necessary trial of man, to give him the knowledge of truth and obedience, according to the good pleasure of God, afforded a fair opening.

From what has been observed respecting a certain analogy subsisting between the subjects of both worlds, the association of this angelic spirit with the serpent may not seem so strange; for in such a political concern, or matter of state, whilst the Lord of heaven associated with man in the interest of the government, a design of rebellion would naturally cause those subjects of the upper world to seek a correspondence abroad, in order to draw into their interest the subjects of this, where immediately the scene of action was designed to commence.

And it should ever be a warning to all who are distinguished for their natural endowments, not to trust even to their superior sagacity and genius; that the most subtile and intelligent of all the creatures of the world, was the first to be drawn into that accursed enterprise, in which he was crushed to the ground and irrevocably lost: for, though the other creatures will be preserved, and enjoy at last the glorious liberty of the children of God; yet by the irrevocable decree of Heaven, the serpent and all his generation shall die. On account of this early connection of the arch rebel with the serpent, and also of his subtile and wily character, he himself is doomed to bear the hateful name of the serpent.

Upon this ground, therefore, of the interest of the kingdom, and the question who shall have the dominion? the war of ages first broke out; and notwithstanding the successful attempts which have been made, in these last days, to conceal the nature of Jesus Christ's gospel, and to divert the attention of men from the hope of Israel in the restoration of the kingdom—doctrine of the kingdom is still, and to the great day of decision will be the point, the all-interesting ground of the solemn controversy. And being at once assaulted by the subtilty of the serpent, and the falsehood (i. e., "ye shall not surely die," Gen. 3: 4,) of the devil, the woman was deceived and fell: and by one of the deepest stratagems that was ever conceived, together with the natural force of, perhaps, as tempting an object as ever allured the human eye, the man also was overcome and ruined.

By the fall man lost the image of God . . . the crown of glory and honor fell from his head, and he ceased to be lord of the creation, and became like the beasts that perish, as necessarily as the breathless body loses its glory and strength, and changes into a corpse. This event most strikingly illustrated the all-important truth, that all the blessedness, glory and power of creatures arise from their union with the blessed, glorious and almighty Word; that life and the favor of God is enjoyed only through the Lord of Life, the Beloved One, who was set up from everlasting. And being thus without strength, have left the Rock of Ages, man, and the whole creation with him, necessarily fell under the power and tyranny of the great enemy, the devil, who, by displacing Adam, came in and took possession of the whole realms, and set up over man and all the creation the REIGN of DEATH. . . .

Falling from Christ his life, Satan rose over him armed with power derived from his separation from the only Source of life (Ps. 36: 9; Col. 3: 4,) and which is therefore called the power of death, and set up over him the dominion of darkness, and tyranny and horror. But the darkness and misery of the power and reign of the devil in the world (or the aion or age) serves thus to brighten the illustration of the light and blessedness of the power and (coming) reign of the Lord of light and glory.—Spaulding's Divine Theory.

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.—There is not a step the christian takes toward heaven but the world, the flesh, or the devil is disputing it with him. And even if there were no world or devil without, there is always world enough and devil enough within him to keep him in danger—to warn him to keep close to the great Captain of his salvation.

For the Crisis.

"WHERE THOU ART IS HEAVEN."

I would not choose this dreary earth
For my abiding home;
I find its joys fade at their birth,
See tears where'er I roam.
But O, there is a world to come,
To the faithful to be given;
And there with Christ I'd have my home,
"For where thou art is heaven."

Then I will glory in the cross,
Oft to confess his name;
All things of earth I'll count but loss,
And still despise the shame.
And glad a pilgrim I will roam,
Though earthly ties be riven,
That I may dwell with Christ at home,
"For where thou art is heaven."

O Lord, forbid that I should come
Short of the promised rest,
Grant I may meet in that bright home
The ones I've loved the best.
Still shall my strongest love to thee,
My Savior dear be given,

For the Crisis.

Letters Illustrative of Christian Experience.—No. 3.

My Beloved Sister:—Why need you seek to do great things, in order to secure salvation? I am aware that very many like yourself stumble at the simplicity of the way of faith—they verily think, as did a brother B., that they "must do something more than that!" Let me tell you the incident, and just how he was led to see his folly.

I was attending a protracted meeting in an adjoining town, and had been endeavoring, according to the ability given me by God, to assist souls in finding Jesus. A brother, who had for years been stumbling at this simple way, called on me, and requested to be instructed in relation to the exercise of faith. Well, I endeavored to simplify it in various ways, but all had no effect. I was almost ready to give up, thinking I could not in any way help his mind. At length, in reply to my remark that he must make the unreserved surrender of himself, and his all to God, and that it was his privilege and duty when he did this, to begin then to reckon himself the Lord's; simply believe that his offering was an acceptable one through Jesus Christ, he exclaimed, "O that is too simple; I must do something more than that!" Just then an illustration struck my mind; it was this. Bro. B., supposing you had a watch, and it would not keep good time. You try to regulate it, but all of your efforts are vain; now what would you do with it? "I would take it to the watch-maker, and have it repaired," was his reply. Very well, but would you stand constantly by his side, and assist a little here, and a little there? "O no! I should place the watch in his hands, and go away about my business." Yes, yes, brother B., now do just so with that heart of yours.—It is out of order—it does not keep good time, it is not in harmony with that of Christ. Take it to him—he is the great Repairer of hearts—he knows precisely how to regulate it—it was for this very purpose he came to earth, that he might put hearts in order—place it in his hands, and as you remarked respecting the watch—"go away about your business." "That is it! that is it! I will do it!" he exclaimed, with much earnestness.

Why, sister F., the way of faith is simplicity itself. Look at the case of the man who came to the Savior, saying, "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." Listen to the reply:—I will—be thou clean." He sends a blind man to the pool of Siloam, there to wash off the clay which he had put upon his eyes. He washed, and came seeing. Was the virtue in Siloam's pool? Nay, verily, but in the faith that led him there to wash. Naaman was one of those who suppose they "must do something more" than simply obey the command. He wanted to be healed of the leprosy, and having some faith in the testimony of the "little maid" who was taken captive, and brought from the land of Israel to wait upon Naaman's wife, he went to visit the prophet Elisha. The prophet did not wait upon him in person, although he was a great general, but sent his servant to him, with the humiliating direction for him to go and bathe seven times in Jordan, and then he would be healed.

Naaman turned his chariot away in a rage. Bathe seven times in that despised Jordan! Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them and be clean?

He thought something more was necessary, and he had it all fixed up in his mind beforehand just how the prophet would effect the cure. "Behold, I thought he will surely come out to me, and stand, and call upon the name of the Lord his God, and strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper." Ah! but Elisha did no such thing. Those who mark out the way just how God must work, in accomplishing their salvation, invariably are disappointed.

Naaman's servant understood just where his master's pride was wounded, and so he very meekly inquired of him, "My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, would'st thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee, wash, and be clean." O yes, there is no doubt but that Naaman would very readily have done some "great thing," and so would thousands do, could they thereby obtain salvation. But this simple "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," is too small—too trifling—"I must do something more than that," is the feeling felt, if not always expressed. "If by having one of my legs amputated, I could become a christian, I would be one to-day," said a beloved friend, with whom I had been conversing in regard to the interests of his soul. The way of faith looked to him like folly—he could not believe that on such a simple point, man's eternal destiny turned—that such a great change as the christian spoke of could result from such a simple exercise. He, too, wished to do something more than merely believe—he, too, wanted to do some "great thing," or behold some striking outward manifestation.

But my letter is long, and I will defer some further thoughts touching this point unto a future letter. Yours in love,

Mary D. Wellcome.

The Word of God more than Honey for Sweetness.

"How sweet are thy words unto my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth."—Ps. 119: 107.

"Sweeter also than honey and the dropping of honey-combs."—Ps. 19: 10.

The delicious honey dropping from the new made honey-comb is not so sweet to the believer as the word of God to his soul. And what is sweeter than honey?

In our day human art will manufacture honey, and the semblance to genuine honey is so perfect that the deception is scarce perceptible to the unpractised taste. Those, therefore, who would obtain the genuine, purchase it in the honey-comb, or get it direct from the hive; for human skill has never yet been able to manufacture the beautiful, perfect cells, in which "the little busy bee" lays up its treasure in storehouses.

In our day, too, there is much manufactured Scripture; and perverted, "corrupted," and "wrested" scripture, sold in the theological market for the genuine word, and the people buy it at large prices, and eat it with greediness, supposing they are feasting on the pure word; but alas! how deceived.

If the people would discover their error, and have the real honey of the word, let them come to the fountain head of truth,—the Bible; here is the delicious truth dropping from the honey-comb in all its native purity and sweetness.

"GOD KNOWS IT ALL!"

Dear Bro. Grant:—I clipped these lines from an old paper. I have often felt the sentiment expressed by this beautiful language. If the solemn recognition of the divine presence were with us ever, it would have a powerful effect to deter us from sin, and secure further conformity to the mind of Christ. I feel now while rejoicing in the truth, a renewed determination to endure hardship as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, mindful of the awful truth, "Thou God seest me."

Yours in patient waiting,

GOD KNOWS IT ALL.

In the dim recess of thy spirit's chamber,
Is there some hidden grief thou may'st not tell?
Let not thine heart forsake thee, but remember
His pitying eye who sees and knows it well.
God knows it all!

And art thou tossed on billows of temptation,
And wouldst do good, but evil oft prevails?
O, think, amid the waves of tribulation,
When earthly hopes, when earthly refuge fails,
God knows it all!

And dost thou sin—thy deed of shame concealing
In some dark spot no human eye can see?
Then walk in pride, without one sigh revealing
The deep remorse that should disquiet thee?
God knows it all!

Art thou oppressed, and poor, and heavy hearted,
The heavens above thee in thick clouds arrayed,
And well nigh crushed, no earthly strength imparted,
No friendly voice to say—"Be not afraid?"
God knows it all!

Art thou a mourner? are thy tear-drops flowing
For one too early lost to earth and thee?
The depths of grief no human spirit knowing,
Which moan in secret, like the moaning sea—
God knows it all!

Dost thou look back upon a life of sinning?
Forward, and tremble for thy future lot!
There's One who sees the End from the Beginning—
Thy tear of penitence is unforgot.
God knows it all!

Then go to God! Pour out your hearts before him!
There is no grief your Father cannot feel;
And let your grateful songs of praise adore him—
To save, forgive, and every wound to heal.
God knows it all—God knows it all!

Thoughts on Eccl. 12: 7.

There is no Scripture, perhaps, more frequently quoted to prove continued being than Eccl. 12 : 7,—and possibly, none more completely misapplied or less apprehended. The difficulty would be removed if we would but observe that there is an ellipsis in the text, which, when filled, takes it out of the hands of the immortalists and turns the force of the argument against themselves; or, if they still tenaciously adhere to it, involves them in inextricable difficulties, as we shall presently see.—"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it. Or, to give both members of the sentence in full, Then the dust shall return to the earth as it was; and then the spirit shall return to God (who gave it) as it was. But some will say, that is far fetched, and is not correct: very well, if it be incorrect then the opposite must be right, Then the spirit shall return as it was not. Now one thing is made manifest; either one or the other is true, that the spirit returns as it was, or as it was not; and which ever extremity is taken, matters not, for both are fatal to the error we combat; for it is assumed that the spirit is "the man proper"—"the accountable person"—"the rational intelligence"—"the immortal soul," &c; that it possesses individuality, identity, consciousness, and locomotion; that it is analagous to God and cannot die. Now if either of these hypotheses be true, save the last, and the first position be admitted, that "the spirit returns as it was," then it necessarily follows, that the spirit thought, said and did before it was given, all that it has so performed after it was given. This proves too much, for it proves a prior individual existence, and endorses "the conflict of ages," "the transmigration of souls," the old doctrine of the Essenians, and the modern one of the "Latter-day Saints." Otherwise, the spirit returns as it was not; for on the same hypothesis, if it be responsible for all that it has done since it was given, it returns with the impress of all these acts, &c., which it had not before, for in this case it was given pure.

Again, in either of these cases, it destroys the assumption that the Spirit is man, and a part of God; for God cannot sin, and man has sinned and does once more. If that were true, God would be divided and multiplied, and each added part sinning against its original part, and the original one condemning those parts of himself to "Eternal Torment." What a tangled web we weave, and into what inextricable confusion do we plunge ourselves when we depart from "the Word;" get wiser than "what is written," and "spoil" ourselves "through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men . . . and not after Christ."

Well, then, what is the truth in the case? I understand it to be this; that when man turns to dust again, that the Spirit, a universal principle of life, contained in the atmosphere; common to all breathing animals; from which is extracted life, as it is inhaled into the lungs, from whence it is imparted to the blood, and by its circulation distributed to the whole system; this life principle, called here spirit, returns to God; who gave it when he "breathed into his (the man's) nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Hence the spirit has no individuality, but the dust will have, when reorganized by a resurrection from the dead, and "the Eternal" shall again impart to it his Spirit and his breath, no more to be taken from it, in consequence of sin having entered the world, and death by sin. "Neither can they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Geo. W. S. . . .

For the Crisis.

Answer to S. J. Higgins' Queries.

In the Crisis of Oct. 27th, your article appeared with the four following questions:

QUERIES.

Will Bro. Brewer please answer the following questions?

1st. Which beast is to continue forty and two months, (or, as in the margin, make war,) the leopard or the two-horned beast? See Rev. 13 : 5. "And there was given unto HIM a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given HIM to continue (margin make war,) forty and two months.—Ver. 7. "And it was given unto HIM to make war with the saints and overcome them."

Answer 1st. I consider the mouth and the two-horned beast one and the same power.

Dan. 7: 8, 20,—25.

I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, AND A MOUTH SPEAKING GREAT THINGS. That horn that had eyes, and A MOUTH that spake very great things, whose look was more stout than his fellows. I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of days came. And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until A TIME AND TIMES and the dividing of time.

Rev. 13: 5–9.

And there was given unto him a MOUTH SPEAKING GREAT THINGS, and blasphemies: and POWER WAS GIVEN UNTO HIM TO CONTINUE FORTY AND TWO MONTHS. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. AND IT WAS GIVEN UNTO HIM TO MAKE WAR WITH THE SAINTS, AND TO OVERCOME THEM: AND POWER WAS GIVEN HIM OVER ALL KINDREDS, AND TONGUES AND NATIONS. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. If any man have an ear, let him hear.

By the above you will doubtless perceive that the horn of Dan. 7th and the mouth of Rev. 13th are identical. Daniel declares the saints should be given into his hands, a time and times and the dividing of time. John has the same period forty and two months.

Query 2d.—To whom does this him refer?

Answer.—To the same.

Query 3d.—Where is it written that the two-horned beast, that was to come up AFTER the leopard beast and exercise all the power of the FIRST beast BEFORE him, was to continue forty and two months?

Answer 3d. It is not written anywhere that the two-horned beast was to come up AFTER the leopard beast. But it is written that the TWO-HORNED BEAST should practice his miracles IN THE SIGHT OF THE BEAST. See verse 14th. If the two-horned beast was to perform his miracles IN THE SIGHT of the beast, most certainly they must have been contemporaneous. I have heard some persons quote the word used in this query, i. e., after, as though it was written. The above period only specifies the time that the saints were to be given into HIS HAND.

Query 4th.—If the miracles (plural) of the two-horned beast are simply claiming divine authority to burn heretics, what are the miracles of the false prophet?

I do not and never did understand the miracles (plural) of this power to be simply claiming and exercising divine authority to burn heretics. But in order to show that the two-horned monster has most essentially and effectually, in the estimation of his simple, faithful devotees, wrought a plurality of his deceptive miracles, and deceived them thereby, I will show. Concerning the miracle of causing fire to come from heaven. It was to be a deception, to say the most concerning this matter, whether it is his claiming power from the Almighty to burn heretics on the great day of Auto de Fe; when kings, emperors, bishops, priests, monks, nuns, and assembled thousands, witnessed the pious fraud; or, whether it is something more marvellous like the following, you must decide for yourself.

Here is a scene for contemplation, witnessed at the Holy Sepulchre during the ceremony of the Holy Fire, which takes place once a year. Says the writer:—

"In the Holy Sepulchre the hatred between the sects is fierce and undying. The Greek and Roman Catholics are the most numerous . . . during the ceremony of the Holy Fire, WHICH TAKES PLACE ANNUALLY. The scenes of ferocity and violence that occur are indescribable. Religious insanity and all the horrors of blood thirsty fanaticism destroy many of the devotees. Crimes of the darkest character are committed with impunity. Half naked men and frantic women struggle madly through the crowd, with live coals of fire pressed to their breasts. Bodies of the stabbed and maimed are dragged out dead. The chanting of the priests, the howling of the burnt, the groaning of the crushed, fill the thick, suffocating air; and from the swaying mass arise dying shrieks of 'Immanuel! Immanuel! Glory to God!' Sickened with the disgusting and humiliating spectacle, the beholder turns away with the startling words of Ferdinand upon his lips—'Hell is empty and all the devils are here.'"

Great God, what a picture of human depravity, and what a mass of moral putrefaction; yea, what prodigious deception! Truly, God has sent them a strong delusion!

And now in order to make out a plurality, I will name only a few of the legion of miracles that this two-horned beast has professed to work in the sight of men.

First. The transubstantiation of the bread and wine to the flesh and blood of the Lord Jesus. The following account of the liquefaction of the blood of St. Janarius, is related by a respectable eye witness:—

"The grand procession on this occasion was composed of a numerous body of the clergy, and an immense number of people of all ranks, headed by the Archbishop of Naples himself, who carried the phial containing the blood of the saint. A magnificent robe of velvet, richly embroidered, was thrown over the shoulders of the bust; a mitre, refulgent with jewels, was placed on its head. The Archbishop, with a solemn pace and a look full of awe and veneration, approached, holding forth the sacred phial which contained the precious lump of blood. He addressed the saint in the humblest manner, fervently praying that he would graciously condescend to manifest his regard to his faithful votaries, the people of Naples, by the usual token of ordering that lump of his sacred blood to assume its natural and original form. In these prayers he was joined by the multitude around, particularly the women. My curiosity prompted me to mingle with the multitude. I got, by degrees, very near the bust. Twenty minutes had already elapsed since the Archbishop had been praying with all possible earnestness, and turning the phial round and round without any effect. An old monk stood near the Archbishop and was at the utmost pains to instruct him how to handle, chafe, and rub the phial. He frequently took it into his own hand; but his manœuvres were as ineffectual as those of the Archbishop.

By this time the people had become noisy, the women had become quite hoarse with praying. The monk continued his operations with increased zeal, and the Archbishop was all over in a profuse sweat with vexation. An acquaintance whispered it might be prudent to retire. I directly took the hint, and joined the company I had left. An universal gloom overspread all their countenances. One very beautiful young lady cried and sobbed as if her heart had been ready to break. The passions of some of the rabble without doors took a different turn; instead of sorrow, they were filled with indignation and rage at the old saint's obduracy—and some went so far as to call him an old ungrateful yellow-faced rascal. It was now almost dark, and, when least expected, the signal was given that the miracle was performed. The populace filled the air with repeated shouts of joy. A band of music began to play. Te Deum was sung; couriers were dispatched to the royal family (then at Portico,) with the glad tidings; the young lady dried up her tears; the countenances of our company brightened in an instant; and they sat down to cards, without further dread of eruptions, earthquakes, or pestilence!"

Truly they were deceived by the miracles the pope,—the horn,—the mouth,—yea, the two-horned beast gave them power to do in their sight. Said the Rev. Anthony Gavin, in his work, "The Master-Key of Popery,"—

"I remember that when the Rt. Hon. Lord Stanhope, then General of the English forces, was in Saragossa, after the battle

he went to see the treasures of the church of The Lady, Del Pillar, which was showed to him, and I heard him say these words:—If all the Kings of Europe should gather together all their treasures, AND PRECIOUS STONES, they could not buy half of the riches of this treasury."

And by this expression of so wise and experienced a man, every body may judge of the value.

"In the room of her treasures are innumerable heads, arms, legs, eyes and hands, made of gold and silver, presented to her by the people, who have been cured, as they believe, BY MIRACLE through the Virgin's divine power and intercessions!"

Legions of such miracles might be quoted from the Lives of the Romish Saints. It will not be expedient to enlarge on the deceptive miracles of Sts. Patrick, George, Andrew, Thos. A. Becket, &c., &c., known only in the annals of the blasphemously so called Holy Roman Catholic Church.

With respect to this power, I will now quote, in addition to my former articles, a brief extract from Croly on the Apocalypse.

"In the twelfth century, the attempts of the little christian congregation of the Alps to translate the gospel, came like a thunder clap to the ears of Rome. In the absence of all rule of Scripture, the Papacy had followed the course of human nature, adding superstition to superstition, and power to power. The sitter on its throne, in the fantastic madness of ambition and ignorance, assumed the attributes of Deity, proclaimed himself infallible, the remitter of sins, Lord of the gates of hell and heaven, the vicar of God, the image of God on earth, the fountain of sanctity to man. He made saints, HE WROUGHT PRETENDED MIRACLES. He was worshipped with incense. THE KING OF KINGS, he sent forth his oracular voice to the sovereigns of the earth. He claimed tribute of all nations. He took away and gave diadems, and commanded their wearers to come and kiss the dust at his footstool."

Compare Rev. 13: 7, 8, with Rev. 16, and then lay the above facts by the side of the following, and I think the case is made out that the "little horn" of Daniel, the "mouth" of Rev. 13th, and the two-horned beast are the same. Says Croly,—

"With the title of UNIVERSAL BISHOP, the power of the papacy and the dark ages alike began. The Latin language, overwhelmed in the dialects of the Gothic invaders, had ceased to be spoken. The Latin Scriptures were thus in an unknown tongue, and the people, disturbed and impoverished by a perpetual war, had neither time nor knowledge for their translation. The ignorance had reached the clergy, and THE POPE, MORE A WARRIOR AND A STATESMAN than a priest, found he could rise to dominion without writings of either prophet or apostle. The Scripture died out of the world's memory."

Another writer, speaking of Pope Clement II. has said,—

"Vespasian Colonna, one of the prominent families in Rome, having a quarrel with the pope, besieged him with 3000 foot and 800 horse, and the pope took refuge in the castle of St. Angelo. The pope concluded a truce, but no sooner was the army gone than the pope, not thinking himself bound to observe an agreement extorted from him by violence, pronounced the sentence of deposition against Cardinal Pompey Colonna, and at the same time sent all the troops he had there in Rome and the neighboring castles into the territories of the Colonnas, with orders to destroy all before them with fire and sword. They took several of their towns, dismantling some, burning others, and committing everywhere such devastations as reduced a great part of the country to a desert."

Says Koch, in his history of Europe, page 18, London edition,—

"Under the pontificate of Pope Gregory II., usurping all the rights of sovereignty and at the same time reviving the ancient names of the Senate and the Roman people, the Pope was recognized as chief head of this new republic, and had the general direction of all affairs, both at home and abroad. The territory of this republic, formed of the Dutchy of Rome, extended from north to south, from Viterbo as far as Terracina, and from east to west from Narni to the mouth of the Tiber. Such was the weakness of the Eastern empire, that all the efforts of the emperors to reduce the Romans to subjection were unavailing. The Greek viceroy—the Duke of Naples, who had marched to besiege Rome, was killed in battle, together with his son, and the Exarch himself was compelled to make peace with the republicans."

This was the two-horned beast, in my humble opinion, that John saw coming up out of the earth, and that did his miracles in the SIGHT OF THE FIRST BEAST; or, as Sawyer renders it in his new translation' "And he exercised all the power of the first beast IN HIS PRESENCE."—The Douay translation has the following:—"And he executed all the power of the former beast in his sight." Penn's celebrated translation has it, "And I saw another wild beast coming up out of the earth, and it had horns like a lamb, and it exerciseth all the authority of the first beast before it. Wakefield,—"And he executeth all the authority of the first beast IN HIS PRESENCE. Professor Murdock's Syriac has the following: "And I saw another beast of prey which came out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spoke like a dragon, and before him he exercised all the authority of the first beast of prey." Thomson has the following: "And I saw another wild beast coming up out of the earth, and it had two horns like a lamb, and it spoke like a dragon; and it executeth all the authority of the first beast in his presence." Prof. Whiting has it thus:—"And I saw another wild beast ascending out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spoke like a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first wild beast in his sight."

In my articles on the 13th of Rev., published in the Crisis, Sept. 22d and 29th, I think I showed from historical facts when the dragon gave his seat to the leopard beast. Then the latter became the ruling power for a time, until the latter part of the eighth century; and one writer, Simpson on the prophecies, says, page 320,—

"It was the year of our Lord 755 that the pope of Rome absolutely shook off the authority of the Emperor. From this year, therefore, the commencement of the popedom in its full sense is to be dated. This year, too, Pepin king of France sent the keys of Revenna and Pentapolis to the pope, (the two horns like a lamb, lamblike because they needed a protector, not full grown horns or beasts,) and about the same time it was the woman or the great city of Rome began to play the whore publicly, and commit fornication with the kings of the earth, establishing the worship of images in the church. First, by the decree of a synod held at ROME A. D 726; afterwards by a council held at Nice, A. D. 787. In this council were present two hundred and fifty bishops, out of all the western States. Here was confirmed the supremacy of the pope and image worship."

It appears to me that it is a matter of utter impossibility for any power to arise on earth and fill the mould of prophecy, in the future, from the following considerations:

First. The horn of Dan. 7th was to make war against the saints. And they were to be given into his hands, for a time, times and the dividing of time. He has most assuredly had them in his power.

Second. If the two-horned beast is yet to arise, then the leopard must arise again in order for the two-horned beast to perform his miracles in his sight; and you will not fail to observe that during the existence of this power it was to be a time of persecution, for they that would not worship should be killed.

Third. The two-horned beast was to exercise all the power of the first beast before him, i. e., in his sight; and make an image to the wounded beast; consequently we are yet to witness the leopard beast coming into power; an image to be made; and there must be some correspondence in order to be an image. And if the two-horned beast is yet to arise, and exercise ALL THE POWER of the first before him, there must be some correspondence both in the sovereignty and its duration.

Fourth. The Lord Jesus speaking of this papacy in Matt. 24: 15–21 declares that there NEVER SHOULD BE ANY LIKE IT AGAIN: consequently, if the power of Dan. 12: 11 and Matt. 24: 15–21 was the papacy, and the two-horned beast is not the papacy, then it follows that the two-horned beast must arise and exercise ALL THE POWER THAT THE PAPACY DID.

May God in mercy fill us with that wisdom which is easily to be entreated. And, as Koch aemrks in the following language, "A new and powerful monarchy rose on the ruins of the German Empire. That of the ROMAN PONTIFFS, WHICH MONOPOLIZED BOTH SPIRITUAL AND TEMPORAL DOMINIONS: AND EXTENDED ITS INFLUENCE OVER ALL THE KINGDOMS OF CHRISTENDOM." I look for no other. It has been very justly remarked, "if prophecy has been fulfilled once, why expect a repetition?" Mosheim, (Ecclesiastical History, vol. 1, page 95) speaking of the affairs of Pope Stephen, concludes as follows: "AND THUS WAS THE BISHOP OF ROME RAISED TO THE RANK OF A TEMPORAL PRINCE."

Lastly. As the question, "What are the miracles of the false prophet?" is not involved in this subject, I shall not pretend to answer. Wishing to be led into all truth and preserved from error, I remain thy Bro. looking for the coming of Jesus as the next and only event, as revealed in the word, that we should look for. Amen.

The Soul.—No. 7.

We have now examined the first nine passages in the Bible that contain the word nephesh or soul, and find it used first, and primarily, to represent the whole being, whether man, or any other animal. In the second place, we find the word rendered life, but applied indiscriminately to man and beast. We have found no intimation yet that soul or nephesh represents any more when applied to man, than to beast,—no hint that it is used to indicate an immortal, conscious entity, existing separately from the material organism.

We pass on in our examination, and come to the 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th examples, where nephesh is used, which are found in Gen. 9: 10, 12, 15 and 16 and applied to beasts. Verse 10. "And with every living creature (khayah nephesh, living soul.) that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beast of the earth with you; from all that go out of the ark, to every beast of the earth." In this passage, every animal is called just what man is called in Gen. 2: 7—"a living soul," (khayah nephesh.) Ver. 12. "And God said, this is the token of the covenant which I make between me and you, and every living creature (khayah nephesh) that is with you." Ver. 15. "And I will remember my covenant, which is between me and you, and every living creature (khayah nephesh) of all flesh." Ver. 16. "And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it, that I may remember the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature (khayah nephesh, living soul,) of all flesh that is upon the earth." These passages are too plain to need comment. Soul, or nephesh, is used in these examples in its primary sense, meaning the whole creature. Take another example in Ezk. 47: 9. "And it shall come to pass, that every thing (nephesh) that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live." The word thing, representing the fish in the rivers, cannot mean "immortal, never dying souls," but simply that every creature is a soul.

We pass to the fourteenth example, where the word nephesh occurs, which is in Gen. 12: 5. "And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan." There can be no doubt but that "souls" in this Scripture refer to the whole beings, and it is also evident that they had no existence before they were "gotten in Haran."

We have now come down the stream of time over two thousand years, but have not found the least evidence that man is an "immortal soul," or that he has one in him. Why all this silence? Why no intimation that death only applies to the body, or "house" in which a man lives? We have passed over many records of death, but find no hint that any part of the man is alive between death and the resurrection.

Let us return and look at the Bible necrology. The first is a murder, recorded in Gen. 4: 8–10. "And Cain talked with Abel his brother; and it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him." Did he send the good man to heaven by this means? Read on. "And the Lord said unto Cain, where is Abel thy brother? And he said I know not; am I my brother's keeper? And he said, what hast thou done? the voice (not of Abel) of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." Observe, the Lord does not say, Abel's soul has come to me declaring that you have killed him! Where is Abel? Let Paul answer. Heb. 11: 4. "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts; and by it he, being dead, yet speaketh," or as in the margin, "is yet spoken of." We see that Paul declares Abel is yet "dead."

The next death is recorded in Gen. 5: 5. "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years; and he died." This proves Satan a liar, for he said Adam should not die. How is it possible to get the idea from the Bible that Adam is now alive, unless we believe Satan?

The next record is in Gen. 5: 8. "And all the days of Seth were nine hundred and twelve years; and he died."—Ver. 11. And all the days of Enos were nine hundred and five years; and he died." Were these men alive when they were dead? If so, how do we know but they were dead when alive? Similar records, to the foregoing, continue till we come to Enoch, ver. 24. "And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him." Says Paul in Hebrews 11: 5, "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death." He went bodily, or in other words, Enoch was taken, and as he went, all others will go,—that is, bodily. We find no promise of seeing God out of the body. Job says, "though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." Job 19: 26. This scripture can not be fulfilled without a resurrection of the dead. Job does not intimate that he shall see God out of his flesh, but says, "Man lieth down, and riseth not till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Job. 14: 12. But, says David, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15. Says Paul, when speaking of the work of Christ, "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. 3: 21. Why do not some of the Bible writers tell us that when man dies he goes to heaven? We can find no proof that man exists in a conscious state out of his body. The idea is absurd.

"The Strait Gate."

"Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." LUKE 13: 24.

The way to life is illustrated in various ways. Sometimes it is represented as a course over which persons run for a prize: hence Paul,—"So run, that ye may obtain." Again, "Ye did run well." And again, "That I have not run in vain."

He speaks of himself as engaged in combat, as contending for victory. "So fight I, not as one that beateth the air." And to Timothy, "Fight the good fight of faith." In this running and fighting of which the apostle speaks, we have an exemplification of the command of Christ, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate."

It has, undoubtedly, been noticed, that the word is not—straight, but strait—the former, signifying not crooked; the latter, narrow, close, difficult. From what we learn from this and other parts of the "Sacred Book," together with what has been developed in the history of man, we are satisfied that the way to life is extremely difficult. Paul, with all his wisdom and his spiritual acquirements, was under the necessity of keeping under his body and bringing it into subjection. He assigns as a reason, "Lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast-away." To guard against this result, and, if possible, counteract the power of temptation, he exhorts the believer to "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." And as if the above did not fully express and bring out the number of evils with which he had to contend, and the triumphs he had achieved, he says, "In all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings, in fastings; By pureness, by knowledge, by long suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, By the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armor of righteousness on the right-hand and on the left. By honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report; as deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold we live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

Who, after reading the above, can doubt that Paul did "strive to enter in at the strait gate?" Based on his effort is the remark, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." What an example of affliction and patience we discover in his life. And after all this suffering has been endured, and he is made to drink the bitterest cup of gall, he very calmly calls it a "light affliction," which he assures us is nothing in comparison with the exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

But there is another phase to this subject. In the connection in which the corresponding passage is found in Matt. 7, the Savior says, "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets. Enter ye in at the strait gate," &c. Now it would seem from the manner in which these passages are connected, that striving to enter in at the strait gate consists in doing to others as we would that they should do to us; or, as elsewhere, loving our neighbor as we do ourselves. Taking this view of the matter, we may consider man's duty divided into two departments. The first, comprising all our duty to our Maker which is set forth in the command, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind;" the second, including all the duties of life beside, and is, or consists, in loving our neighbor as ourselves. To do this is to live up to the "golden rule;" to fail to do it is to lose sight of the chief end of our existence.

To conform to this rule requires an effort, a GREAT effort. Hence the command, "strive to enter in at the strait gate." Let not the lusts of the natural heart have dominion over you. Do not be swerved from the right, but constantly pursue that which is good. Let not that inordinate love of riches influence your action, and blind your mind, and harden your hearts to the wants of suffering humanity. Avarice is said to be the "root of all evil." It is the quintessence of selfishness. Wherever this is predominant the heart becomes hard, the conscience seared, the sensibilities blunted, the affections of the soul vitiated, and the whole nature of man depraved. Should this evil principle become general, or gain the ascendancy in the universe, earth would soon become depopulated, and heaven turned into a pandemonium. Virtue cannot live with this evil principle. Indeed, truth and error are not more incompatible than are virtue and avarice. To harbor or foster the latter in our hearts, is to live for ourselves regardless of the wants of others, and to persist in this course is to travel in the broad way that leads to everlasting death. But to take an opposite course, to crucify self, to take up the cross daily, however contrary to our natural wishes, is an evidence that we are in the narrow way that leads to life. We have written thus much, but have hardly introduced the subject, yet we trust we have suggested some thoughts to the mind of the reader that may be of some benefit.

Let us "strive to enter in at the strait gate," that when the Master of the house rises up and shuts to the door, we may be found with the sanctified at the marriage feast.

Look Here!

Bro. C. F. Hudson is rather hard up. He has written a good book, "Debt and Grace." It has stirred the theological world a good deal; but in the hard times last year, his friends were unable to help him as anticipated, so they left him, like Issachar, couching between two burdens. He owes $100 or more, which is due in a few days. Now who will help? Who owes Bro. H.? Let such remit at once to Hon. W. G. Crosby, Boston, Mass. Who wants a book? Let such send $1.25 to Bro. Grant, or to me, and get it. Every little helps. Come, take hold. If you don't, I shall.

The Two-Horned Beast.—No. 3.

Mr. Smith on the 39th page thus continues: "Of the same characters Peter thus writes; Knowing this first, that there shall come scoffers in the last days, walking after their own lusts, and saying where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation. For this they are willingly ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water; whereby the world that then was being overflowed with water perished. But the heavens and earth, which are now, by the same word are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.' There have ever been men of this infidel cast; but in the last days there is to arise a generation of them, whose influence and audacity are to be such, that they are spoken of as though they never existed. Peter proceeds to note their willful ignorance of the deluge and of the future judgment. (Just as though God could not control the laws of nature.) He exposes the falsehood of their premises, showing that the same word of God which had predicted the deluge has predicted the coming of Christ, which these scoffers deny.

Peter in his second epistle, 2d chap., gives a further description of this power of infidelity, and its impious agents; in the which are the following characteristics: Privately bringing in damnable heresies; denying the Lord who bought them; and bringing upon themselves swift destruction. "And many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you, whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not; and their damnation slumbereth not." He enforces this latter idea of their impending ruin by mentioning the ruin of the old world, and of Sodom and Gomorrah. He then proceeds in mentioning various traits of their character; such as walking after the flesh; despising government; presumptuous, self-willed; not afraid to speak evil of dignities; having eyes full of adultery; beguiling unstable souls; cursed children; who have forsaken the right way, and gone astray; following the way of Balaam. (Balaam went to curse the people of God. These follow him.) They are also wells without water; clouds carried with a tempest, they speak great swelling words of vanity; promising liberty while they themselves are the servants of corruption. Liberty is their darling theme, while corruption is the origin, and slavery the result of their principles.

Jude fills his epistle with lively descriptions of this same power of infidelity, and of the scoffers of the last days. He speaks of the characters that he was about to describe, as being before of old ordained to this condemnation.

Here we find a clue to direct us in the inquiry who they are. In the original it is, of old fore-written to this judgment; alluding, no doubt, to the ancient predictions written by the prophets concerning this power. . . . Jude describes them, crept in unawares, denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. Here is the notable characteristics of Antichrist. Denying the Father and the Son: denying that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh . . . He then proceeds to recapitulate some of the characteristics noted by Peter and adds the following; filthy dreamers; going in the way of Cain. [This is terribly significant.] Cain hated his brother and slew him because his own works were evil and his brother's were righteous. . . Wandering stars, (i. e. carrying on their operations in different countries.) These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit. [Here is something striking.] Their plans are formed separately from the mass of mankind. All is done in the dark. All these features have a striking relation to the rise and progress of the licentious infidel power under consideration."

Had Mr. Smith lived in our day, he could not have better portrayed the now existing power.

H. PRATT.

ASTRONOMY.—The contemplation of celestial things will make a man both speak and think more sublimely and magnificently when he descends to human affairs.—Cicero.

☞ Such is the disposition of mankind, if they cannot blast the action, they will censure the vanity.

he went to see the treasures of the church of The Lady, Del Pillar, which was showed to him, and I heard him say these words:—If all the Kings of Europe should gather together all their treasures, AND PRECIOUS STONES, they could not buy half of the riches of this treasury."

And by this expression of so wise and experienced a man, every body may judge of the value.

"In the room of her treasures are innumerable heads, arms, legs, eyes and hands, made of gold and silver, presented to her by the people, who have been cured, as they believe, BY MIRACLE, through the Virgin's divine power and intercessions!"

Legions of such miracles might be quoted from the Lives of the Romish Saints. It will not be expedient to enlarge on the deceptive miracles of Sts. Patrick, George, Andrew, Thos. A. Becket, &c., &c., known only in the annals of the blasphemously so called Holy Roman Catholic Church.

With respect to this power, I will now quote, in addition to my former articles, a brief extract from Croly on the Apocalypse.

"In the twelfth century, the attempts of the little christian congregation of the Alps to translate the gospel, came like a thunder clap to the ears of Rome. In the absence of all rule of Scripture, the Papacy had followed the course of human nature, adding superstition to superstition, and power to power. The sitter on its throne, in the fantastic madness of ambition and ignorance, assumed the attributes of Deity, proclaimed himself infallible, the remitter of sins, Lord of the gates of hell and heaven, the vicar of God, the image of God on earth, the fountain of sanctity to man. He made saints, HE WROUGHT PRETENDED MIRACLES. He was worshipped with incense. THE KING OF KINGS, he sent forth his oracular voice to the sovereigns of the earth. He claimed tribute of all nations. He took away and gave diadems, and commanded their wearers to come and kiss the dust at his footstool."

Compare Rev. 13: 7, 8, with Rev. 16, and then lay the above facts by the side of the following, and I think the case is made out that the "little horn" of Daniel, the "mouth" of Rev. 13th, and the two-horned beast are the same. Says Croly,—

"With the title of UNIVERSAL BISHOP, the power of the papacy and the dark ages alike began. The Latin language, overwhelmed in the dialects of the Gothic invaders, had ceased to be spoken. The Latin Scriptures were thus in an unknown tongue, and the people, disturbed and impoverished by a perpetual war, had neither time nor knowledge for their translation. The ignorance had reached the clergy, and THE POPE, MORE A WARRIOR AND A STATESMAN than a priest, found he could rise to dominion without writings of either prophet or apostle. The Scripture died out of the world's memory."

Another writer, speaking of Pope Clement II. has said,—

"Vespasian Colonna, one of the prominent families in Rome, having a quarrel with the pope, besieged him with 3000 foot and 800 horse, and the pope took refuge in the castle of St. Angelo. The pope concluded a truce, but no sooner was the army gone than the pope, not thinking himself bound to observe an agreement extorted from him by violence, pronounced the sentence of deposition against Cardinal Pompey Colonna, and at the same time sent all the troops he had there in Rome and the neighboring castles into the territories of the Colonnas, with orders to destroy all before them with fire and sword. They took several of their towns, dismantling some, burning others, and committing everywhere such devastations as reduced a great part of the country to a desert."

Says Koch, in his history of Europe, page 18, London edition,—

"Under the pontificate of Pope Gregory II., usurping all the rights of sovereignty and at the same time reviving the ancient names of the Senate and the Roman people, the Pope was recognized as chief head of this new republic, and had the general direction of all affairs, both at home and abroad. The territory of this republic, formed of the Dutchy of Rome, extended from north to south, from Viterbo as far as Terracina, and from east to west from Narni to the mouth of the Tiber. Such was the weakness of the Eastern empire, that all the efforts of the emperors to reduce the Romans to subjection were unavailing. The Greek viceroy—the Duke of Naples, who had marched to besiege Rome, was killed in battle, together with his son, and the Exarch himself was compelled to make peace with the republicans."

This was the two-horned beast, in my humble opinion, that John saw coming up out of the earth, and that did his miracles in the SIGHT OF THE FIRST BEAST; or, as Sawyer renders it in his new translation, "And he exercised all the power of the first beast IN HIS PRESENCE."—The Douay translation has the following:—"And he executed all the power of the former beast in his sight." Penn's celebrated translation has it, "And I saw another wild beast coming up out of the earth, and it had horns like a lamb, and it executeth all the authority of the first beast before it." Wakefield,—"And he executeth all the authority of the first beast IN HIS PRESENCE." Professor Murdock's Syriac has the following: "And I saw another beast of prey which came out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spoke like a dragon, and before him he exercised all the authority of the first beast of prey." Thomson has the following: "And I saw another wild beast coming up out of the earth, and it had two horns like a lamb, and it spoke like a dragon; and it executeth all the authority of the first beast in his presence." Prof. Whiting has it thus:—"And I saw another wild beast ascending out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spoke like a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first wild beast in his sight."

In my articles on the 13th of Rev., published in the Crisis, Sept. 22d and 29th, I think I showed from historical facts when the dragon gave his seat to the leopard beast. Then the latter became the ruling power for a time, until the latter part of the eighth century; and one writer, Simpson on the prophecies, says, page 320,—

"It was the year of our Lord 755 that the pope of Rome absolutely shook off the authority of the Emperor. From this year, therefore, the commencement of the popedom in its full sense is to be dated. This year, too, Pepin king of France sent the keys of Revenna and Pentapolis to the pope, (the two horns like a lamb, lamblike because they needed a protector, not full grown horns or beasts,) and about the same time it was the woman or the great city of Rome began to play the whore publicly, and commit fornication with the kings of the earth, establishing the worship of images in the church. First, by the decree of a synod held at ROME A. D 726; afterwards by a council held at Nice, A. D. 787. In this council were present two hundred and fifty bishops, out of all the western States. Here was confirmed the supremacy of the pope and image worship."

It appears to me that it is a matter of utter impossibility for any power to arise on earth and fill the mould of prophecy, in the future, from the following considerations:

First. The horn of Dan. 7th was to make war against the saints. And they were to be given into his hands, for a time, times and the dividing of time. He has most assuredly had them in his power.

Second. If the two-horned beast is yet to arise, then the leopard must arise again in order for the two-horned beast to perform his miracles in his sight; and you will not fail to observe that during the existence of this power it was to be a time of persecution, for they that would not worship should be killed.

Third. The two-horned beast was to exercise all the power of the first beast before him, i. e., in his sight; and make an image to the wounded beast; consequently we are yet to witness the leopard beast coming into power; an image to be made; and there must be some correspondence in order to be an image. And if the two-horned beast is yet to arise, and exercise ALL THE POWER of the first before him, there must be some correspondence both in the sovereignty and its duration.

Fourth. The Lord Jesus speaking of this papacy in Matt. 24: 15–21 declares that there NEVER SHOULD BE ANY LIKE IT AGAIN: consequently, if the power of Dan. 12: 11 and Matt. 24: 15–21 was the papacy, and the two-horned beast is not the papacy, then it follows that the two-horned beast must arise and exercise ALL THE POWER THAT THE PAPACY DID.

May God in mercy fill us with that wisdom which is easily to be entreated. And, as Koch aemrks in the following language, "A new and powerful monarchy rose on the ruins of the German Empire. That of the ROMAN PONTIFFS, WHICH MONOPOLIZED BOTH SPIRITUAL AND TEMPORAL DOMINIONS: AND EXTENDED ITS INFLUENCE OVER ALL THE KINGDOMS OF CHRISTENDOM." I look for no other. It has been very justly remarked, "if prophecy has been fulfilled once, why expect a repetition?" Mosheim, (Ecclesiastical History, vol. 1, page 95) speaking of the affairs of Pope Stephen, concludes as follows: "AND THUS WAS THE BISHOP OF ROME RAISED TO THE RANK OF A TEMPORAL PRINCE."

Lastly. As the question, "What are the miracles of the false prophet?" is not involved in this subject, I shall not pretend to answer. Wishing to be led into all truth and preserved from error, I remain thy Bro. looking for the coming of Jesus as the next and only event, as revealed in the word, that we should look for. Amen.

The Soul.—No. 7.

We have now examined the first nine passages in the Bible that contain the word nephesh or soul, and find it used first, and primarily, to represent the whole being, whether man, or any other animal. In the second place, we find the word rendered life, but applied indiscriminately to man and beast. We have found no intimation yet that soul or nephesh represents any more when applied to man, than to beast,—no hint that it is used to indicate an immortal, conscious entity, existing separately from the material organism.

We pass on in our examination, and come to the 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th examples, where nephesh is used, which are found in Gen. 9: 10, 12, 15 and 16 and applied to beasts. Verse 10. "And with every living creature (khayah nephesh, living soul.) that is with you, of the fowl, of the cattle, and of every beast of the earth with you; from all that go out of the ark, to every beast of the earth." In this passage, every animal is called just what man is called in Gen. 2: 7—"a living soul," (khayah nephesh.) Ver. 12. "And God said, this is the token of the covenant which I make between me and you, and every living creature (khayah nephesh) that is with you." Ver. 15. "And I will remember my covenant, which is between me and you, and every living creature (khayah nephesh) of all flesh." Ver. 16. "And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it, that I may remember the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature (khayah nephesh, living soul,) of all flesh that is upon the earth." These passages are too plain to need comment. Soul, or nephesh, is used in these examples in its primary sense, meaning the whole creature. Take another example in Ezk. 47: 9. "And it shall come to pass, that every thing (nephesh) that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live." The word thing, representing the fish in the rivers, cannot mean "immortal, never dying souls," but simply that every creature is a soul.

We pass to the fourteenth example, where the word nephesh occurs, which is in Gen. 12: 5. "And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran; and they went forth to go into the land of Canaan." There can be no doubt but that "souls" in this Scripture refer to the whole beings, and it is also evident that they had no existence before they were "gotten in Haran."

We have now come down the stream of time over two thousand years, but have not found the least evidence that man is an "immortal soul," or that he has one in him. Why all this silence? Why no intimation that death only applies to the body, or "house" in which a man lives? We have passed over many records of death, but find no hint that any part of the man is alive between death and the resurrection.

Let us return and look at the Bible necrology. The first is a murder, recorded in Gen. 4: 8–10. "And Cain talked with Abel his brother; and it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him." Did he send the good man to heaven by this means? Read on. "And the Lord said unto Cain, where is Abel thy brother? And he said I know not; am I my brother's keeper? And he said, what hast thou done? the voice (not of Abel) of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." Observe, the Lord does not say, Abel's soul has come to me declaring that you have killed him! Where is Abel? Let Paul answer. Heb. 11: 4. "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts; and by it he, being dead, yet speaketh," or as in the margin, "is yet spoken of." We see that Paul declares Abel is yet "dead."

The next death is recorded in Gen. 5: 5. "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years; and he died." This proves Satan a liar, for he said Adam should not die. How is it possible to get the idea from the Bible that Adam is now alive, unless we believe Satan?

The next record is in Gen. 5: 8. "And all the days of Seth were nine hundred and twelve years; and he died."—Ver. 11. And all the days of Enos were nine hundred and five years; and he died." Were these men alive when they were dead? If so, how do we know but they were dead when alive? Similar records, to the foregoing, continue till we come to Enoch, ver. 24. "And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him." Says Paul in Hebrews 11: 5, "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death." He went bodily, or in other words, Enoch was taken, and as he went, all others will go,—that is, bodily. We find no promise of seeing God out of the body. Job says, "though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." Job 19: 26. This scripture can not be fulfilled without a resurrection of the dead. Job does not intimate that he shall see God out of his flesh, but says, "Man lieth down, and riseth not till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Job. 14: 12. But, says David, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15. Says Paul, when speaking of the work of Christ, "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. 3: 21. Why do not some of the Bible writers tell us that when man dies he goes to heaven? We can find no proof that man exists in a conscious state out of his body. The idea is absurd.

"The Strait Gate."

"Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." LUKE 13: 24.

The way to life is illustrated in various ways. Sometimes it is represented as a course over which persons run for a prize: hence Paul,—"So run, that ye may obtain." Again, "Ye did run well." And again, "That I have not run in vain."

He speaks of himself as engaged in combat, as contending for victory. "So fight I, not as one that beateth the air." And to Timothy, "Fight the good fight of faith." In this running and fighting of which the apostle speaks, we have an exemplification of the command of Christ, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate."

It has, undoubtedly, been noticed, that the word is not—straight, but strait—the former, signifying not crooked; the latter, narrow, close, difficult. From what we learn from this and other parts of the "Sacred Book," together with what has been developed in the history of man, we are satisfied that the way to life is extremely difficult. Paul, with all his wisdom and his spiritual acquirements, was under the necessity of keeping under his body and bringing it into subjection. He assigns as a reason, "Lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast-away." To guard against this result, and, if possible, counteract the power of temptation, he exhorts the believer to "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." And as if the above did not fully express and bring out the number of evils with which he had to contend, and the triumphs he had achieved, he says, "In all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings, in fastings; By pureness, by knowledge, by long suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, By the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armor of righteousness on the right-hand and on the left. By honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report; as deceivers, and yet true; as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold we live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

Who, after reading the above, can doubt that Paul did "strive to enter in at the strait gate?" Based on his effort is the remark, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." What an example of affliction and patience we discover in his life. And after all this suffering has been endured, and he is made to drink the bitterest cup of gall, he very calmly calls it a "light affliction," which he assures us is nothing in comparison with the exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

But there is another phase to this subject. In the connection in which the corresponding passage is found in Matt. 7, the Savior says, "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets. Enter ye in at the strait gate," &c. Now it would seem from the manner in which these passages are connected, that striving to enter in at the strait gate consists in doing to others as we would that they should do to us; or, as elsewhere, loving our neighbor as we do ourselves. Taking this view of the matter, we may consider man's duty divided into two departments. The first, comprising all our duty to our Maker which is set forth in the command, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind;" the second, including all the duties of life beside, and is, or consists, in loving our neighbor as ourselves. To do this is to live up to the "golden rule;" to fail to do it is to lose sight of the chief end of our existence.

To conform to this rule requires an effort, a GREAT effort. Hence the command, "strive to enter in at the strait gate." Let not the lusts of the natural heart have dominion over you. Do not be swerved from the right, but constantly pursue that which is good. Let not that inordinate love of riches influence your action, and blind your mind, and harden your hearts to the wants of suffering humanity. Avarice is said to be the "root of all evil." It is the quintessence of selfishness. Wherever this is predominant the heart becomes hard, the conscience seared, the sensibilities blunted, the affections of the soul vitiated, and the whole nature of man depraved. Should this evil principle become general, or gain the ascendancy in the universe, earth would soon become depopulated, and heaven turned into a pandemonium. Virtue cannot live with this evil principle. Indeed, truth and error are not more incompatible than are virtue and avarice. To harbor or foster the latter in our hearts, is to live for ourselves regardless of the wants of others, and to persist in this course is to travel in the broad way that leads to everlasting death. But to take an opposite course, to crucify self, to take up the cross daily, however contrary to our natural wishes, is an evidence that we are in the narrow way that leads to life. We have written thus much, but have hardly introduced the subject, yet we trust we have suggested some thoughts to the mind of the reader that may be of some benefit.

Let us "strive to enter in at the strait gate," that when the Master of the house rises up and shuts to the door, we may be found with the sanctified at the marriage feast.

Bro. C. F. Hudson is rather hard up. He has written a good book, "Debt and Grace." It has stirred the theological world a good deal; but in the hard times last year, his friends were unable to help him as anticipated, so they left him, like Issachar, couching between two burdens. He owes $100 or more, which is due in a few days. Now who will help? Who owes Bro. H.? Let such remit at once to Hon. W. G. Crosby, Boston, Mass. Who wants a book? Let such send $1.25 to Bro. Grant, or to me, and get it. Every little helps. Come, take hold. If you don't, I shall.

The Two-Horned Beast.—No. 3.

Mr. Smith on the 39th page thus continues: "Of the same characters Peter thus writes; Knowing this first, that there shall come scoffers in the last days, walking after their own lusts, and saying where is the promise of his coming? For since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation. For this they are willingly ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water; whereby the world that then was being overflowed with water perished. But the heavens and earth, which are now, by the same word are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.' There have ever been men of this infidel cast; but in the last days there is to arise a generation of them, whose influence and audacity are to be such, that they are spoken of as though they never existed. Peter proceeds to note their willful ignorance of the deluge and of the future judgment. (Just as though God could not control the laws of nature.) He exposes the falsehood of their premises, showing that the same word of God which had predicted the deluge has predicted the coming of Christ, which these scoffers deny.

Peter in his second epistle, 2d chap., gives a further description of this power of infidelity, and its impious agents; in the which are the following characteristics: Privately bringing in damnable heresies; denying the Lord who bought them; and bringing upon themselves swift destruction. "And many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you, whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not; and their damnation slumbereth not." He enforces this latter idea of their impending ruin by mentioning the ruin of the old world, and of Sodom and Gomorrah. He then proceeds in mentioning various traits of their character; such as walking after the flesh; despising government; presumptuous, self-willed; not afraid to speak evil of dignities; having eyes full of adultery; beguiling unstable souls; cursed children; who have forsaken the right way, and gone astray; following the way of Balaam. (Balaam went to curse the people of God. These follow him.) They are also wells without water; clouds carried with a tempest, they speak great swelling words of vanity; promising liberty while they themselves are the servants of corruption. Liberty is their darling theme, while corruption is the origin, and slavery the result of their principles.

Jude fills his epistle with lively descriptions of this same power of infidelity, and of the scoffers of the last days. He speaks of the characters that he was about to describe, as being before of old ordained to this condemnation.

Here we find a clue to direct us in the inquiry who they are. In the original it is, of old fore-written to this judgment; alluding, no doubt, to the ancient predictions written by the prophets concerning this power. . . . Jude describes them, crept in unawares, denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ. Here is the notable characteristics of Antichrist. Denying the Father and the Son: denying that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh . . . He then proceeds to recapitulate some of the characteristics noted by Peter and adds the following; filthy dreamers; going in the way of Cain. [This is terribly significant.] Cain hated his brother and slew him because his own works were evil and his brother's were righteous. . . Wandering stars, (i. e. carrying on their operations in different countries.) These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit. [Here is something striking.] Their plans are formed separately from the mass of mankind. All is done in the dark. All these features have a striking relation to the rise and progress of the licentious infidel power under consideration."

Had Mr. Smith lived in our day, he could not have better portrayed the now existing power.

For the Crisis.

My Experience.

Somewhere about five years ago I stepped into the store of friends, where I was in the habit of trading, and there was present an adventist, who was conversing on the subject of the sleep of the dead and immortality only through the Messiah. I was very soon interested—not in acquiescence with his views, but in opposition. I quoted Scripture to my own satisfaction, at least, and especially the answer of our Lord to the thief when they were on the cross; this was, in my view, then a clincher. I came off, as I supposed, triumphant over the adventist, notwithstanding he told me of his old Bible at home where the comma was in a different place from where it was in my Bible. Well, I thought as he was reduced down to a comma as the support of his faith, he certainly must be in the dark; and of course as he taught that "the dead know not anything" he was infidel. He offered to lend me books to read, but I was afraid of infidel leaven, and declined accepting or reading.

See how the leaven has worked! From that time I have often come across such passages as these in my Bible: "Life and immortality are brought to light in the gospel;" "Who only hath immortality." And when I met with such passages in my scripture reading, I thought of the conversation with the advent friend, and it seemed to me it looked very much like the teaching he taught; but then the comma!—"this day in paradise" would settle the question for that time; but then those above quoted and similar passages of scripture would come up in my mind, and I would think of my advent friend. I went a little further; occasionally would step in to the meeting of advent brethren, in hopes to hear something more about "these things;" but I never happened in when these subjects were the theme of discourse. And so I was yet in the dark, afraid to search and read lest the leaven of infidelity should work—and yet desiring to learn more about "these things." In this unsettled and doubtful state of mind I continued, until about six months since I took up a copy of the Crisis; and it was the first ever I had seen or heard of. An article which I saw attracted my attention, and I was interested. I looked at the title of the paper, and the place of publication, and soon found that it advocated the views of my advent friend. I looked over the list of publications, and made a memorandum of some works by Jacob Blain, Lenfest, Preble and others, and the next mail bore my order and money to the Crisis office, from whence I received the publications. By this time I was hungry for the truth, being now in the right state of preparation to receive it, viz: a purpose to read and think for myself, and to follow where the truth should lead me, yet firmly resolved not to go one step in the reception of any teaching unless I found Bible for it. I saw that if I would be free to receive truth, I must be single eyed, and not bend the scriptures to my creed or to any other man's creed.

The first of these works which I read was "the excellency of the Lord's anointed." It seemed very much like Bible teaching, and quite a different view of Messiah from the "creed;" but it came with the convicting power of truth, and I laid the book down thankful that it had fallen into my hands. I saw such a Christ presented as I had never before seen, and that he is the "Son of God." And so it was with Jacob Blain, "Glad tidings," "Pauline Theology," by H. L. Hastings, and others. I read them with a hearty relish, and was so interested in these truths that I sat up the greater part of several nights reading them; and from that time (six months since) until the present, I have had no doubts or wavering as to what is God's truth in regard to the righteous and the wicked, viz: that he will destroy the wicked, banish sin and woe from his universe, and set up his everlasting kingdom "on the earth," where he will gather all his saints, and give unto them, through Christ, immortality and eternal life.

I rejoice in these great and glorious truths. I feel that I am emancipated from the errors in which I was formerly held. Human creeds are now too confined for me. I want the whole Bible for my creed; and this hope of future glory is like an anchor to the soul, entering into that within the vail, and taking hold on earth, and not in a region beyond the clouds, of which we know nothing, only as we are misled by false philosophy and the traditions of men. But we do know something of the earth; and we can think of its destined beauty renovated, purified and restored to perhaps more than original beauty and perfection. This is (as the sailors say) good holding ground in which to let go the anchor Hope.

Since I have come to understand when Christ's everlasting kingdom will be set up, and where it will be, I find no difficulty in that comma. I think that the thief understood his question and the answer of the Messiah, and that he will receive his reward as promised in that day, when all the rest of God's saints will receive theirs, viz: at the Lord's second coming to set up his kingdom. This is just what the thief asked for; I think he prayed believing.

At Wilbraham campmeeting I saw baptism administered. I supposed it a matter of not much consequence as to the mode. I had been sprinkled and taught that sprinkling with blood was the mode in which persons were inducted into the priesthood under the former dispensation; that the Messiah went down to the river Jordan and was sprinkled, not with blood, but being the antitype, with water; that sprinkling or pouring was significant of the baptism of the Holy Spirit, being the thing which is signified by water baptism, and therefore that sprinkling or pouring is the scriptural mode.

But after I came home I began to think that being buried with Christ in baptism meant something, and on thinking further on this subject I could not see how sprinkling or pouring is significant of death, burial and resurrection; that to be sprinkled is not "being buried with him in baptism;" and that nothing could be so significant of that as going into the water. I saw it all. My duty was clear. I at once made up my mind to be baptized at the first opportunity which should occur, and I find to my comfort that obedience is the narrow path in which to find peace. It keeps the glorious hope bright; whereas disobedience will bring darkness and doubt, and will end in death. Now I had read about being "buried with him in baptism" hundreds of times, without any conviction of its meaning—why should it appear to my mind of such force and significance now? I will tell you. Now I believe in the resurrection—a whole resurrection—whereas formerly I believed in only a half resurrection, and, I might say, only half believed in that; for it had no practical influence. But now I see the significance of immersion, because I believe that the whole man goes into the grave, and at the resurrection the whole man will come up out of the grave.

Just so in regard to the Messiah and his being offered for my sins. I now believe that a whole Christ was offered on the cross—that "His soul was made an offering for sin;" that "He poured out his soul unto death." My belief was once that a human body only was offered for the sins of the world, while Christ himself went to Paradise. It makes all the difference in the world whether we believe the whole or only half the Scriptures—a whole or only a half resurrection: and I rejoice in that liberty wherewith the truth has made me free, and hope to continue steadfast unto the end.

Book Notice.

Bro. Grant:—At the request of some ministering brethren, I have just got out a tract of sixteen pages, containing the two hundred proof texts for destruction, and a brief explanation of them; also the ten passages that prove the universe will be cleansed from woe and sin when Christ has finished his mediatorial work, as is seen in 1 Cor. 15:25–26. It also refers to all the texts relied on to prove endless misery, and some remarks on them, showing that they are few and figurative, and so no proof of the doctrine. Its title is:—The Wicked not Immortal. I shall sell any number at the rate of $1,00 per hundred, which is cheaper than sixteen page tracts are ever sold; my object being, not to sell for profit, but to spread truth by a cheap tract, hoping that brethren will be induced to buy and give to friends, &c. Sixteen hundred pages, and one hundred families supplied for $1,00!! Postage will be seventeen cents, per hundred, nine cents for fifty and five cents for twenty-five—a less number, one cent apiece. But in the Eastern States they can be sent the cheapest by Express, where one hundred are sent. It can be had at the Crisis office, and soon of Eld. J. Marsh, Rochester, and at my house No. 19, Division street, Buffalo.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Hartford, Me., Aug. 24, 1858, Ruth W. Delano, daughter of Jesse and Sarah Delano, aged 23 years.

Her disease was consumption. She was a great sufferer, yet never murmured or complained, but seemed perfectly resigned to her lot. She had a good hope through grace which afforded her consolation through her sickness, and gave her the assurance that all was well. She expressed much satisfaction in having christian people visit her. I called and prayed with her a number of times during her sickness, and found her mind clear and calm. She was ever ready to converse upon the subject of religion, and spoke of death with composure. Said she was ready and willing to go at any time. One day, while seated by her bedside, she requested us to sing,

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

Her countenance expressed the peace she enjoyed within. She was much beloved by all who knew her. May the Lord give grace to sustain the afflicted parents, and sanctify the affliction to the good of all, and bring us to enjoy everlasting life in the kingdom of God.

"Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal."

E. M. Haggett.

Died, at Newfield, Conn., Wednesday evening, at 10 o'clock, Nov. 3d, after a long and painful illness, Mrs. Harriet E. Cook, aged 26 years, daughter of Reuben and Lucy Chase of Newfield, Conn.

Sister Cook was baptized some eight years since by Bro. Mathewson, since which time for quite a period she did not enjoy her mind as a christian. Since last spring her health has been rapidly declining, and she became thoughtful for the future. At her own request her mother presented her petition for prayer at the Collinsville campmeeting. The brethren then prayed for her; and some who had attended the meeting talked and prayed with her on their return. Since which time she renewed her confidence in God, and felt willing to die, and freely expressed herself to that effect, though naturally fearful of death. She was not afraid to die, and desired her friends to meet her in the kingdom. She did not speak much during the last few days that she lived, and on Wednesday eve passed quietly and peacefully away. She sleeps in Jesus. "So he giveth his beloved sleep." She left three young children and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss.

Her funeral was attended by a large concourse of people at the church in Newfield, where the writer was permitted to address the people from 1 Thess. 4: 13, 14.

"And now they'll think of one, who in
Her youthful beauty died,
The fair, meek blossom, that grew up
And faded by their side;
In the cold, moist earth they laid her,
When the forest casts the leaf,
And they'll weep that one so lovely
Should have a life so brief.
Yet not unmeet it was that one,
Like that young friend of theirs,
So gentle and so beautiful,
Should perish with the flowers."

Died, in Portland, Me., Nov. 18th, after a few days of extreme suffering, caused by the explosion of a fluid lamp, Mary E., wife of Mr. W. F. Brock, and eldest daughter of Ezra and Mary A. Scammon, aged 23 years 7 months.

The following lines, composed by one of the bereaved relatives, are designed to give some idea of the intense anguish of the weeping mother; of the sorrow of the almost heart-broken husband, as well as of the grief of others in this mourning circle.

That they all may find the blessed Savior to be their support in this hour of trial, is the earnest prayer of the writer, who attended the funeral of the deceased.

I am sad, I am lonely, O ask me not why?
The loved ones of my heart I have seen fade and die,
They have gone and have left me a wanderer here,
Then ask me not why I now shed the lone tear?

I loved my dear children with the purest of love;
But now taken from me here lonely I rove,
Mid the storms and the tempests that burst o'er my head;
O fain would I sweetly repose with my dead.

Yarmouth, Me., Nov. 26, 1858.

Died, of consumption, in Ellsworth, Me., Oct. 30th, Catherine, daughter of Wm. S. and Rachel Griffin, aged 19 years 4 months and 10 days.

The subject of this notice was a believer in the personal coming of Christ to raise the dead, and to give life and immortality to all who love his appearing, and also to restore the earth to its Eden beauty and perfection. Sr. Catherine bore her sufferings with christian fortitude and resignation, and fell asleep in Jesus with the expectation of soon awaking in his likeness. She leaves many friends to mourn her loss, to whom I would say, prepare to meet the loved one in the morn of the resurrection, where death shall sever friends no more. Funeral discouse by the writer.

For the Crisis.

THE HEALING FOUNTAIN.

Are you weary? Are you weary
Of this Earth, its toils, its fears?
Is all dreary? Dark and dreary
Sinfulness, steeped down in tears?
Glimpses bright of that blest haven,
Fairer than the flowers of Eden,
Unto sin-sick souls are given,
But to lead them, gently lead them
From the famine and the dearth,
But to feed them, only feed them
In the fields of richer growth.

Are you thirsting? Are you thirsting
Now, to taste of righteousness?
There are bursting, for you bursting
Streams of everlasting bliss.
Come, but taste the waters, healing,
Come with anxious, holy feeling,
At the throne of mercy kneeling.
Thou art pleading, strongly pleading
To be cleansed and freed from sin,
Now art needing, only needing
Christ the Hope but formed within.

Thou art gazing, now art gazing
On the water's healing flow.
'Tis amazing, O amazing!
All are cured who e'er may go.
O, the healing of that fountain,
Rushing down from Calvary's mountain,
Unto righteousness anointing.
Thou art pardoned. Thou art pardoned
From thy sins, once pressing sore,
And thy burdened, thy once burdened
Soul may taste and thirst no more.

The Bible.

A faithful witness of creation's morn, a true record of the communications and revelations that God has made to his people throughout all ages of the world; that book of books, the origin and fountain of pure wisdom, who can measure its existence? Who, with the assistance of human wisdom, can think to penetrate the mind of Jehovah to reach its origin, or who can indulge in a conjecture to charge its production to the wisdom of finite humanity, whose existence is like the flower of the field that blossoms to-day, and to-morrow fades away, and whose mind is equally as changeable as the four winds of heaven. The heathen exhibit more profound wisdom and learning, and more true devotion in adoring their idol gods, than the infidel with all his boasted knowledge and superior reason, who will thus conjecture upon the word of inspiration, who desires to say in his heart, there is no God.

But to show the veracity of the Bible, which we contend is the power of God unto salvation to all those that believe, let us look back in the annals of human affairs, or the past dealings of God with his people. We may say six thousand years have almost made their annual rounds since man first became acquainted with the precepts that stand recorded in the beginning of that book; and during this long roll of ages what mighty changes have taken place. Thousands have lived, moved in circles, filled spheres, in the great drama of human life, played their parts, and have passed off from that stage of action where but yesterday, as it were, they developed themselves with energy and ambition amidst the scenes of life, and the accociations of the living; but to-day, like the fleeting beauty of the changeable, they are numbered with the forgotten dead. Yet through all of earth's changes, the same witness that speaks of creation's morn 6000 years ago, lives to-day. Though thousands and millions have lived and died; though empires and kingdoms have risen and fallen; though conquerors and conquering nations have deluged the earth with human blood, in their avidity to blot out inspired truth, yet the same record that informs us of creation and the beauty of this mundane sphere, when in its primeval state, lives to-day. Though the fountains of the mighty deep have once been broken up, and the earth inundated with water that destroyed the ungodly and disobedient in the days of Noe; yet the same word that saluted the ear of Adam 6000 years ago while in the cool of the day and in the paradise of God he communed with his Maker, is still in existence, and its perpetuity may well be expressed in the language of Him who spake as never man spake,—"Though heaven and earth pass away, my word shall not pass away."

It is the same word that informed Adam's happy pair of the tree of life and the tree of death, and the nature of their fruit, the one promulgating life and happiness, the other sorrow and death, that is demonstrated to be true, not only by the first Adam and his posterity suffering that Word's predicted consequence of disobedience, but by virtue of the second Adam's obedience, the first disobeyed and died, the second obeyed and lived; hence by the two most eminent characters spoken of in the whole Bible, it is proven to be true; it has been literally and incontrovertibly demonstrated, not only to be the word of God, but also, as the great Apostle has said, the power of God unto salvation to all those that believe; and vain is the attempt of any individual or society to overthrow the fact, or in other words, to substitute something else in its place, or preach another gospel to preclude the one that Jesus advocated. How absurd the idea for man to institute a system which might be termed the power of man unto salvation, which thousands are doing at the present time; but all is to no purpose, as the history of the past must convince every sentient being.

Almost every philosopher throughout all past ages of the world has prescribed remedies to cure man of the effects of sin. Every school of grace has instituted plans and schemes which it was thought would prove to humanity a complete relief. Still humanity struggles on under the heavy and intolerable burden, trying every proscribed remedy, that peradventure the burden might be removed; all of which proves man's inability to heal himself, or remove the effects of moral transgression. God, who is man's Creator, can be his only physician. He has prescribed a remedy that will heal man forever. He has given us his only Son that we might have life, who through suffering and obedience was made perfect, and became the author of eternal salvation to all those that believe. All that is necessary is to believe and obey. The first Adam disobeyed and died. The second Adam obeyed and lived. The first proves the word of God true by his disobedience and dying; the second proves it true by his obedience and living. Oh! who cannot see the truthfulness of God's word and the beauty and harmony of its teachings concerning the plan of redemption?

Yes, in redemption, O what grace!
Its wonders! O what thought can trace!
Here wisdom shines forever bright;
Praise him! my soul, with sweet delight.

For the Crisis.

Rev. 6: 17.

"For the great day of his wrath is come; (the Revelator saw this prophetically, so he spake of it in the present tense,) and who shall be able to stand?" A very solemn and important question is here asked. "It is appointed unto man once to die, and after this the judgment." "We must all appear before the Judgment seat of Christ." "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive; (all shall have a resurrection,) but every man in his own order." That order is given in John 5: 28, 29. "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Now, who shall abide his coming, who shall stand when he appeareth?

First, we will notice those who will not be able to stand in that day of final decision. 1st, the liar. 2d, the profane swearer. 3d, the thief. 4th, the Sabbath breaker. 5th, the murderer. 6th, the drunkard. 7th, the hypocrite. 8th, the nominal professor. 9th, the moralist. 10th, the infidel; none of these will be able to stand in that great day of God's wrath.

Secondly, who will be able to stand in that day? Those that love God with all the heart, and serve him with all their might. Or, in other words; "The pure in heart" will be able to stand in that day.

We are led from this subject to make two remarks; 1st, that the Judgment day will be a very solemn day to impenitent sinners! Secondly; it will be a very happy and glorious day to the penitent,—the pure in heart!

P. TANDY.

"IT DON'T COST MUCH."—Only a little attention makes my little girl very happy. said a good minister of the Gospel of our Savior,

"Who was once a child,
And children still he loves."

Our attention was attracted by seeing the minister intent on repairing a small article of pleasure for his child; he seeing us about to remark upon his small work, looked up with benignity, and said, "I love to please my little girl—it don't cost much." Happy father, thought I, where there is such gentle attention to a child, there must be some other good qualities which make him a good pastor of Christ's flock.

Spiritualism.

ITS CAUSE AND CURE.

That Spiritualism, in its recent developments, is immoral, unchristian, and calculated to disarrange the order of nature, and the laws of God and man, none can doubt who have watched its progress, and seen its foreshadowings. It is doubtless one of the strong delusions of the latter day, so often alluded to by the Apostles of Christ. Signs and lying wonders; that if it were possible, would deceive the very elect. Spiritual wickedness in high places. Doctrines of devils, forbidding to marry, &c. A tree is known by its fruit, and if this tree is to be thus judged by the fruit it has already produced, we have not much to expect from it, but "apples of Sodom."

I shall not dispute, as many now do, the reality of these phenomena, and call them all "humbug;" for these unbelievers are the most likely to become dupes, when convinced that all is not deception. I shall content myself for the present, with what is acknowledged by the advocates of this system; that it proceeds from the same cause as the ancient witchcraft, divination, necromancy, and oracles of heathen and jewish history, and which is denounced in the Bible as one of the greatest of crimes, and worthy of death. What I wish now to attempt to prove is, the cause that has produced this widely spreading contagion, and the encouragement which it receives from the popular doctrines of the day.

The foundation stone on which spiritual manifestations are based is the heathen and anscriptural doctrine, of the natural immortality of the soul, and the conscious state of the dead. So long as the church and the world hold these doctrines so tenaciously, and represent them as the fundamental truths of religion, it will be in vain to contend against the influence of Spiritualism, and it is no wonder, under these circumstances, that our polemick theologians are so shy of this subject, and spend all their powder on trifles of little consequence, either in this world or in that which is to come, while they permit this wide spreading delusion, that is shaking the very foundations of the church and civil society, to go unnoticed, and "unwiped of justice." Why is this? Is it because they are convinced that any successful effort to destroy this abounding iniquity, would be an act of suicide to themselves, and result in the overthrow of that long-cherished pride, that has dared to arrogate to the creature, an attribute of the Creator: immortality! "God only hath immoriality." No creature possesses it, but as a gift of God to those who "seek for it," and who are made worthy to enjoy this inestimable privilege, of the sons of God.

Let us trace this system of Spiritualism to its source, and we shall find it not very respectable or reliable in its parentage. It can however boast its antiquity, for it originated in Eden, under the tree of the knowledge of good and evil: good lost and evil found. "Ye shall not surely die"—this little seed has produced an abundant harvest, and well nigh filled the whole earth. It furnished Paganism with all her gods and goddesses, who are most of them deified dead men, exalted to an higher sphere, and supposed to be superintending the affairs of men in the flesh, and worthy of their worship and adoration. It has given to Rome her "purgatory," where the souls of the dead are said to be purified by fire, and made fit for heaven, as soon as the priest is satisfied with the sum paid for their ransom. It has furnished Rome likewise with her multitude of saints, whose shrines have been for so many centuries profitable to the church, and made her rich, and increased in goods, and in need of nothing but "to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God:" a lesson she has got to learn.

The Protestant church is not without her share of this spiritual leaven, that has leavened the whole lump of humanity. It has given her an eternal hell of torment, where countless millions of the damned are said to curse and blaspheme their maker in ever-increasing torment, without the least hope of respite or relief, through the countless ages of eternity.

It has rendered the doctrine of the resurrection, a dead letter in her creed; for if the saints have their reward at death, the resurrection is passed already, or is at least a useless ceremony, and therefore a matter of minor importance, while Christ and his Apostles make the resurrection of dead, the sum and substance of our future hope. "They shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just; if there be no resurrection, then those who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished." This is the doctrine of the Bible, but not of the church. The protestant church professes to believe in the conscious state of the dead, which of itself is a misnomer; as well as a flat contradiction to the word of God, which declares that "the dead know not any-thing—that their thoughts perish," &c But who can long be satisfied with this belief, without any demonstration of it? If our departed friends are indeed conscious, and yet feel an interest in those whom they have left behind, then why not communicate? Paganism says they do; Rome says they do, and to some purpose; and the protestant church is on the fence, and in a state of suspense to consider on which side to jump off, back again to Rome, or forward to Spiritualism! Truly her condition is precarious, if there were no third course, for it is evident she cannot long sustain her present position, and we see daily, some choosing one side, and some another. The reformed church now, is but a mere remnant on the map of the world, and the pressure from Rome on the one side, and Spiritualism on the other, is likely to make that little less.

Here then we see clearly the history of Spiritualism; it is a natural consequence of the belief of the immortality of the soul, and the conscious state of the dead; it is, as one has well defined it, "orthodoxy gone to seed." Sowed so liberally, on such well prepared ground, what can we expect, but an abundant harvest?

If we have rightly judged the cause of Spiritualism, we shall be better prepared to discover the cure; it is simply this: remove the cause, and the effect will cease. But how is this to be done? By rejecting heathen philosophy, and popish superstition; and taking the word of God for our guide, and not the traditions of men, that have made the word of God of none effect.

The immortality of the soul is no where to be found in the Bible: man lost all title to immortality by the transgression of our first parents; they were shut out from the tree of life, lest they should eat and live forever as sinners. In the gospel, the only way to obtain eternal life, is by faith in the Son of God, and obedience to his will: all those who reject this only hope of dying man, "shall not see life, but shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power." Man is represented in the Bible as a dying creature, "crushed before the moth, as the flower of the field, as a shadow that passeth away;" and no where in any other character than as subject to death, as the penalty of sin. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."

In the Bible, death is represented as a sleep, a rest, a state of darkness, where there is no knowledge, or wisdom, or work; where nothing is known that is done under the sun. If this doctrine cannot be proved from scripture, it is in vain to attempt to prove any thing against the preconceived opinions of men.

Now if this doctrine be true, that the that the dead know not anything, how can they communicate? Let spiritualism be what it may, it is not what it pretends to be, the spirits of the dead.

"The storm that wrecks the winter sky,
No more disturbs their sweet repose;
Than summer evenings latest sigh,
That shuts the rose."

"I long to lay this painful head and aching heart
Beneath the soil,
And slumber in that dreamless bed
From all my toil."

Here is both rhyme and reason, in spite of orthodoxy; truth will at times creep out, and chase away the clouds of error from the mind, however bewildered in a maze of superstition and credulity, that has hung on the world for ages.

Some will inquire, what then is Spiritualism? I think I have shown what it is not, if the Bible be true; and I care little what it is, if it is not what it pretends to be, it is a lie; and that is enough to warn me against its influence. It may be a hidden law of nature, mesmerism, clairvoyance, magnetism, demonology, and witchcraft, &c., &c. If these ghosts are laid, like Othello, "its occupation is gone," and it will sink in merited oblivion; and be amongst the rubbish of past ages, soon forgotten.

A FACT NEEDING NO COMMENT.—A writer in an influential paper states that he has been shown a list of forty trance-speaking spiritualist mediums of both sexes, including most of the prominent mediums in the country, who have either separated from their husbands and wives, or are living in extreme unhappiness. It is said that most of those who pretend to be mediums become reckless of all moral principle.—Messenger.

George Muller's Orphan House.

Toronto, Sept. 19th, 1858.

As my letter was delayed, I add a few extracts from the report of G. Muller, Bristol, England, respecting his Orphan Houses, and other objects, for the year ending May 26th, 1858, which was lent me by a friend, on showing him a notice in an old Missionary respecting these Orphan Houses. This is the same gentleman, who wrote you a few years ago, a short account of Mr. M.'s work, which you inserted in the Missionary. It is really surprising what this excellent man has been enabled to accomplish by his firm and prayerful trust in God. He has built and paid for two Orphan Houses with accommodation for seven hundred orphans, and intends building a third one to accommodate three hundred more, for which he has the funds in hand. He says:

"Without any one having been applied to for anything by me, the sum of $102,714 9*s*. 6*d*.," (sterling, over half a million dollars) "has been given to me for the orphans, as the result of prayer to God, since the commencement of the work (twenty-five years ago), which sum includes the amount received for the building fund, for the houses already built, and the one to be built. It may also be interesting to the reader to know that the total amount which has been given for the other objects since the commencement of the work, amounts to £38, 297 12*s*. 11*d*., and that which has come in by the sale of Bibles since the commencement, £2, 222 4*s*. 8*d*. by the sale of Tracts, £2, 294, 6*s*, 11*d*. and the payments of the children in the day schools, from the commencement, £2, 138 11*s*, 4*d*. Besides this, also a great variety and number of articles of clothing, furniture, provisions, &c., have been given for the use of the orphans."

I would state that during the year, eighty-two missionaries have been assisted by grants amounting to £3, 531, 12*s*. 4*d*. by Mr. M.'s Institution, in all parts of the world; four day schools with two hundred and six scholars have been supported and seven others assisted with money or copies of the Holy Scriptures; one Sunday school with one hundred and fifty-seven children supported, and eleven others assisted with Bible and Testaments, and one adult school, numbering ninety-five scholars supported; two thousand and four Bibles and seven hundred and ten Testaments were given away, besides a large number sold at reduced prices, and 1, 334, 791 tracts and books have been circulated.

The report says further:

"Of the four hundred and ninety-nine orphans who were, on May 26th, 1858, in the two houses, two hundred and ninety-six were in the new orphan house No. 1, and two hundred and three in the new orphan house No. 2. The former is fitted up for the accommodation of one hundred and forty orphan girls above seven years of age, eighty boys above seven years, and eighty male and female orphans from their earliest days till they are above seven or eight years of age. The infants, after having passed the age of seven or eight years, are removed into the departments for older boys and girls. The new orphan house No. 2 is fitted up for two hundred female infant orphans, and for two hundred older female orphans. When the cases of the orphans waiting for admission on May 26th, 1857, came before me for investigation, it was found that some of the girls had become too old; some had been otherwise provided for; some had been lost sight of; some we found unsuitable for the Orphan Institution, and some had died while waiting for admission. Thus it comes, that though we had at that time altogether the names of nine hundred and ninety orphans waiting for admission, and received only two hundred and nineteen during the past year; we have now only two hundred and seventy-nine boys and forty-six girls waiting, while we had on May 26, 1858, altogether one hundred and ninety-seven vacancies yet in the new orphan house. As fast as cases can be investigated, and are found suitable, the female orphans are admitted; generally, some are received every week. The reader will see that while there are two hundred and seventy-nine boys waiting for admission without vacancies, we have still many vacancies for female orphans.

'As far as I am able to judge, I have now all I require in the way of pecuniary means for the third house also, so that I am able to accomplish the full enlargement of the orphan work to one thousand orphans.

"Pause, esteemed reader! Nearly seven years had I been, day by day, asking the Lord for the needed means to carry out the desire of my heart, concerning the one thousand orphans. Not a single day had elapsed since first I began to pray for means, in which I had not been enabled in the assurance of faith, yea in the full assurance of faith that it would be granted, to bring my request before God, and generally I had prayed even more than once a day concerning the matter. When I began my request for means, viz., to entreat the Lord to give me thirty-five thousand pounds, I knew well what difficulty there was in the way to my obtaining this sum, looking at it naturally. I am too calm, too calculating a person, too much looking at the matter fully, too much in the habit of weighing all the difficulties of a case, as to be carried away by excitement or imagination. I knew I had no ground naturally to expect this large sum; for months, therefore, I had not prayed at all for means for this enlargement, but had only asked the Lord to show me very clearly whether it was his will that I should go forward; but having once come fully to this conclusion, on the grounds which are stated at large in the report published in 1851, I was as certain that the Lord would give me all I needed, as if I had had the money already in hand. It might, at that time, have been naturally said to me, How will you be likely to obtain this large sum of £35,000 for the Building Fund, and at the same time be able to meet the current expenses of the work already in existence? The reply of faith was, I know not whence the money is to come, but I know that God, on whom I depend, is able to provide me with all I need for the current expenses, and also to give me money for the Building Fund. When twelve and a-half years since, I might say contrary to all my former desires, I was led as by an unseen hand, to decide upon leaving the four rented houses, and to build the new orphan house for three hundred children; it was said, how strange it was that I should think of enlarging the work from one hundred and twenty to three hundred orphans, when for years previously, I had almost habitually had to wait upon the Lord for daily supplies day by day. Yet so it was, that the Lord gave me all I needed for the Building Fund, although that was no less than £15,055 3*s*. 2*d*., and I had £776 14*s*. 3*d*. more than I required. Moreover, all the current expenses were met in the meantime, and I was able to begin housekeeping with about £500 in hand, whilst before, I had thought of building that large house, we had had rarely, very rarely, as much as £100 in hand, and often, very often, scarce 100 pence. So this time, whilst the means for the Building Fund were coming in, I had to meet the current expenses, which for the orphans alone amounted to £26,249 10*s*, from May 26, 1851, to February 17, 1858, and for the other objects in the same time, £25,670 9*s*. 6*d*., being altogether, £51,919 19*s*. 6*d*., and when the new house for 400 orphans was opened on November 12, 1857, I had in hand £2292 0*s*. 1*d*. for the current expenses of the orphans. See, esteemed reader, how unbelief is put to shame, and natural reasoning is confounded. Had I, at my own bidding, or for my own honor, or for the gratification of self, in some way or other begun this enlargement, I could have expected nothing but to be confounded. Or, good though my intentions had been, had I not been called for the work, I could have expected nothing but to be confounded. Or, had I regarded iniquity in my heart, whilst I was seeking to carry out this enlargement, I might have prayed much outwardly, but I should not have had my desires granted as to the obtaining of the means."

FRETTING.—Do not fret! If you are poor, look to the miseries of many who are possessed with wealth, and then thank God for your poverty. If you are sick, there is no necessity for fretting, for the morrow may bring to you health. Have you enemies? If so, don't fret or get in a passion, but strive to outlive their maliciousness and envy by noble deeds. Don't fret if you cannot wear such fine clothes and live in such a big house as your neighbor, but resolve that in whatever state God has placed you, with whatever circumstances he has encompassed you, to be content. It is a short time we have to live at the most. Don't spend it in fretting. There is not much comfort to be taken in this world unless we endeavor to take everything easy.

☞ I have found by experience that they who have spent all their life in cities, contract not only an effeminacy of habit, but of thinking.—Goldsmith.

THE HEALING FOUNTAIN.

Are you weary? Are you weary
Of this Earth, its toils, its fears?
Is all dreary? Dark and dreary
Sinfulness, steeped down in tears?
Glimpses bright of that blest haven,
Fairer than the flowers of Eden,
Unto sin-sick souls are given,
But to lead them, gently lead them
From the famine and the dearth,
But to feed them, only feed them
In the fields of richer growth.

Are you thirsting? Are you thirsting
Now, to taste of righteousness?
There are bursting, for you bursting
Streams of everlasting bliss.
Come, but taste the waters, healing,
Come with anxious, holy feeling,
At the throne of mercy kneeling.
Thou art pleading, strongly pleading
To be cleansed and freed from sin,
Now art needing, only needing
Christ the Hope but formed within.

Thou art gazing, now art gazing
On the water's healing flow.
'Tis amazing, O amazing!
All are cured who e'er may go.
O, the healing of that fountain,
Rushing down from Calvary's mountain,
Unto righteousness anointing.
Thou art pardoned. Thou art pardoned
From thy sins, once pressing sore,
And thy burdened, thy once burdened
Soul may taste and thirst no more.

The Bible.

A faithful witness of creation's morn, a true record of the communications and revelations that God has made to his people throughout all ages of the world; that book of books, the origin and fountain of pure wisdom, who can measure its existence? Who, with the assistance of human wisdom, can think to penetrate the mind of Jehovah to reach its origin, or who can indulge in a conjecture to charge its production to the wisdom of finite humanity, whose existence is like the flower of the field that blossoms to-day, and to-morrow fades away, and whose mind is equally as changeable as the four winds of heaven. The heathen exhibit more profound wisdom and learning, and more true devotion in adoring their idol gods, than the infidel with all his boasted knowledge and superior reason, who will thus conjecture upon the word of inspiration, who desires to say in his heart, there is no God.

But to show the veracity of the Bible, which we contend is the power of God unto salvation to all those that believe, let us look back in the annals of human affairs, or the past dealings of God with his people. We may say six thousand years have almost made their annual rounds since man first became acquainted with the precepts that stand recorded in the beginning of that book; and during this long roll of ages what mighty changes have taken place. Thousands have lived, moved in circles, filled spheres, in the great drama of human life, played their parts, and have passed off from that stage of action where but yesterday, as it were, they developed themselves with energy and ambition amidst the scenes of life, and the associations of the living; but to-day, like the fleeting beauty of the changeable, they are numbered with the forgotten dead. Yet through all of earth's changes, the same witness that speaks of creation's morn 6000 years ago, lives to-day. Though thousands and millions have lived and died; though empires and kingdoms have risen and fallen; though conquerors and conquering nations have deluged the earth with human blood, in their avidity to blot out inspired truth, yet the same record that informs us of creation and the beauty of this mundane sphere, when in its primeval state, lives to-day. Though the fountains of the mighty deep have once been broken up, and the earth inundated with water that destroyed the ungodly and disobedient in the days of Noe; yet the same word that saluted the ear of Adam 6000 years ago while in the cool of the day and in the paradise of God he communed with his Maker, is still in existence, and its perpetuity may well be expressed in the language of Him who spake as never man spake,—"Though heaven and earth pass away, my word shall not pass away."

It is the same word that informed Eden's happy pair of the tree of life and the tree of death, and the nature of their fruit, the one promulgating life and happiness, the other sorrow and death, that is demonstrated to be true, not only by the first Adam and his posterity suffering that Word's predicted consequence of disobedience, but by virtue of the second Adam's obedience, the first disobeyed and died, the second obeyed and lived; hence by the two most eminent characters spoken of in the whole Bible, it is proven to be true; it has been literally and incontrovertibly demonstrated, not only to be the word of God, but also, as the great Apostle has said, the power of God unto salvation to all those that believe; and vain is the attempt of any individual or society to overthrow the fact, or in other words, to substitute something else in its place, or preach another gospel to preclude the one that Jesus advocated. How absurd the idea for man to institute a system which might be termed the power of man unto salvation, which thousands are doing at the present time; but all is to no purpose, as the history of the past must convince every sentient being.

Almost every philosopher throughout all past ages of the world has prescribed remedies to cure man of the effects of sin. Every school of grace has instituted plans and schemes which it was thought would prove to humanity a complete relief. Still humanity struggles on under the heavy and intolerable burden, trying every prescribed remedy, that peradventure the burden might be removed; all of which proves man's inability to heal himself, or remove the effects of moral transgression. God, who is man's Creator, can be his only physician. He has prescribed a remedy that will heal man forever. He has given us his only Son that we might have life, who through suffering and obedience was made perfect, and became the author of eternal salvation to all those that believe. All that is necessary is to believe and obey. The first Adam disobeyed and died. The second Adam obeyed and lived. The first proves the word of God true by his disobedience and dying; the second proves it true by his obedience and living. Oh! who cannot see the truthfulness of God's word and the beauty and harmony of its teachings concerning the plan of redemption?

Yes, in redemption, O what grace!
Its wonders! O what thought can trace!
Here wisdom shines forever bright;
Praise him! my soul, with sweet delight.

Rev. 6: 17.

"For the great day of his wrath is come; (the Revelator saw this prophetically, so he spake of it in the present tense,) and who shall be able to stand?" A very solemn and important question is here asked. "It is appointed unto man once to die, and after this the judgment." "We must all appear before the Judgment seat of Christ." "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive; (all shall have a resurrection,) but every man in his own order." That order is given in John 5: 28, 29. "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Now, who shall abide his coming, who shall stand when he appeareth?

First, we will notice those who will not be able to stand in that day of final decision. 1st, the liar. 2d, the profane swearer. 3d, the thief. 4th, the Sabbath breaker. 5th, the murderer. 6th, the drunkard. 7th, the hypocrite. 8th, the nominal professor. 9th, the moralist. 10th, the infidel; none of these will be able to stand in that great day of God's wrath.

Secondly, who will be able to stand in that day? Those that love God with all the heart, and serve him with all their might. Or, in other words; "The pure in heart" will be able to stand in that day.

We are led from this subject to make two remarks; 1st, that the Judgment day will be a very solemn day to impenitent sinners! Secondly; it will be a very happy and glorious day to the penitent,—the pure in heart!

"IT DON'T COST MUCH."—Only a little attention makes my little girl very happy. said a good minister of the Gospel of our Savior,

"Who was once a child,
And children still he loves."

Our attention was attracted by seeing the minister intent on repairing a small article of pleasure for his child; he seeing us about to remark upon his small work, looked up with benignity, and said, "I love to please my little girl—it don't cost much." Happy father, thought I, where there is such gentle attention to a child, there must be some other good qualities which make him a good pastor of Christ's flock.

Spiritualism.

ITS CAUSE AND CURE.

That Spiritualism, in its recent developments, is immoral, unchristian, and calculated to disarrange the order of nature, and the laws of God and man, none can doubt who have watched its progress, and seen its foreshadowings. It is doubtless one of the strong delusions of the latter day, so often alluded to by the Apostles of Christ. Signs and lying wonders; that if it were possible, would deceive the very elect. Spiritual wickedness in high places. Doctrines of devils, forbidding to marry, &c. A tree is known by its fruit, and if this tree is to be thus judged by the fruit it has already produced, we have not much to expect from it, but "apples of Sodom."

I shall not dispute, as many now do, the reality of these phenomena, and call them all "humbug;" for these unbelievers are the most likely to become dupes, when convinced that all is not deception. I shall content myself for the present, with what is acknowledged by the advocates of this system; that it proceeds from the same cause as the ancient witchcraft, divination, necromancy, and oracles of heathen and jewish history, and which is denounced in the Bible as one of the greatest of crimes, and worthy of death. What I wish now to attempt to prove is, the cause that has produced this widely spreading contagion, and the encouragement which it receives from the popular doctrines of the day.

The foundation stone on which spiritual manifestations are based is the heathen and anscriptural doctrine, of the natural immortality of the soul, and the conscious state of the dead. So long as the church and the world hold these doctrines so tenaciously, and represent them as the fundamental truths of religion, it will be in vain to contend against the influence of Spiritualism, and it is no wonder, under these circumstances, that our polemick theologians are so shy of this subject, and spend all their powder on trifles of little consequence, either in this world or in that which is to come, while they permit this wide spreading delusion, that is shaking the very foundations of the church and civil society, to go unnoticed, and "unwiped of justice." Why is this? Is it because they are convinced that any successful effort to destroy this abounding iniquity, would be an act of suicide to themselves, and result in the overthrow of that long-cherished pride, that has dared to arrogate to the creature, an attribute of the Creator: immortality! "God only hath immortality." No creature possesses it, but as a gift of God to those who "seek for it," and who are made worthy to enjoy this inestimable privilege, of the sons of God.

Let us trace this system of Spiritualism to its source, and we shall find it not very respectable or reliable in its parentage. It can however boast its antiquity, for it originated in Eden, under the tree of the knowledge of good and evil: good lost and evil found. "Ye shall not surely die"—this little seed has produced an abundant harvest, and well nigh filled the whole earth. It furnished Paganism with all her gods and goddesses, who are most of them deified dead men, exalted to an higher sphere, and supposed to be superintending the affairs of men in the flesh, and worthy of their worship and adoration. It has given to Rome her "purgatory," where the souls of the dead are said to be purified by fire, and made fit for heaven, as soon as the priest is satisfied with the sum paid for their ransom. It has furnished Rome likewise with her multitude of saints, whose shrines have been for so many centuries profitable to the church, and made her rich, and increased in goods, and in need of nothing but "to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God:" a lesson she has got to learn.

The Protestant church is not without her share of this spiritual leaven, that has leavened the whole lump of humanity. It has given her an eternal hell of torment, where countless millions of the damned are said to curse and blaspheme their maker in ever-increasing torment, without the least hope of respite or relief, through the countless ages of eternity.

It has rendered the doctrine of the resurrection, a dead letter in her creed; for if the saints have their reward at death, the resurrection is passed already, or is at least a useless ceremony, and therefore a matter of minor importance, while Christ and his Apostles make the resurrection of dead, the sum and substance of our future hope. "They shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just; if there be no resurrection, then those who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished." This is the doctrine of the Bible, but not of the church. The protestant church professes to believe in the conscious state of the dead, which of itself is a misnomer; as well as a flat contradiction to the word of God, which declares that "the dead know not any-thing—that their thoughts perish," &c But who can long be satisfied with this belief, without any demonstration of it? If our departed friends are indeed conscious, and yet feel an interest in those whom they have left behind, then why not communicate? Paganism says they do; Rome says they do, and to some purpose; and the protestant church is on the fence, and in a state of suspense to consider on which side to jump off, back again to Rome, or forward to Spiritualism! Truly her condition is precarious, if there were no third course, for it is evident she cannot long sustain her present position, and we see daily, some choosing one side, and some another. The reformed church now, is but a mere remnant on the map of the world, and the pressure from Rome on the one side, and Spiritualism on the other, is likely to make that little less.

Here then we see clearly the history of Spiritualism; it is a natural consequence of the belief of the immortality of the soul, and the conscious state of the dead; it is, as one has well defined it, "orthodoxy gone to seed." Sowed so liberally, on such well prepared ground, what can we expect, but an abundant harvest?

If we have rightly judged the cause of Spiritualism, we shall be better prepared to discover the cure; it is simply this: remove the cause, and the effect will cease. But how is this to be done? By rejecting heathen philosophy, and popish superstition; and taking the word of God for our guide, and not the traditions of men, that have made the word of God of none effect.

The immortality of the soul is no where to be found in the Bible: man lost all title to immortality by the transgression of our first parents; they were shut out from the tree of life, lest they should eat and live forever as sinners. In the gospel, the only way to obtain eternal life, is by faith in the Son of God, and obedience to his will: all those who reject this only hope of dying man, "shall not see life, but shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power." Man is represented in the Bible as a dying creature, "crushed before the moth, as the flower of the field, as a shadow that passeth away;" and no where in any other character than as subject to death, as the penalty of sin. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."

In the Bible, death is represented as a sleep, a rest, a state of darkness, where there is no knowledge, or wisdom, or work; where nothing is known that is done under the sun. If this doctrine cannot be proved from scripture, it is in vain to attempt to prove any thing against the preconceived opinions of men.

Now if this doctrine be true, that the that the dead know not anything, how can they communicate? Let spiritualism be what it may, it is not what it pretends to be, the spirits of the dead.

"The storm that wrecks the winter sky,
No more disturbs their sweet repose;
Than summer evenings latest sigh,
That shuts the rose."

"I long to lay this painful head and aching heart
Beneath the soil,
And slumber in that dreamless bed
From all my toil."

Here is both rhyme and reason, in spite of orthodoxy; truth will at times creep out, and chase away the clouds of error from the mind, however bewildered in a maze of superstition and credulity, that has hung on the world for ages.

Some will inquire, what then is Spiritualism? I think I have shown what it is not, if the Bible be true; and I care little what it is, if it is not what it pretends to be, it is a lie; and that is enough to warn me against its influence. It may be a hidden law of nature, mesmerism, clairvoyance, magnetism, demonology, and witchcraft, &c., &c. If these ghosts are laid, like Othello, "its occupation is gone," and it will sink in merited oblivion; and be amongst the rubbish of past ages, soon forgotten.

A FACT NEEDING NO COMMENT.—A writer in an influential paper states that he has been shown a list of forty trance-speaking spiritualist mediums of both sexes, including most of the prominent mediums in the country, who have either separated from their husbands and wives, or are living in extreme unhappiness. It is said that most of those who pretend to be mediums become reckless of all moral principle.—Messenger.

George Muller's Orphan House.

Toronto, Sept. 19th, 1858.

As my letter was delayed, I add a few extracts from the report of G. Muller, Bristol, England, respecting his Orphan Houses, and other objects, for the year ending May 26th, 1858, which was lent me by a friend, on showing him a notice in an old Missionary respecting these Orphan Houses. This is the same gentleman, who wrote you a few years ago, a short account of Mr. M.'s work, which you inserted in the Missionary. It is really surprising what this excellent man has been enabled to accomplish by his firm and prayerful trust in God. He has built and paid for two Orphan Houses with accommodation for seven hundred orphans, and intends building a third one to accommodate three hundred more, for which he has the funds in hand. He says:

"Without any one having been applied to for anything by me, the sum of $102,-714 9*s.* 6*d.*," (sterling, over half a million dollars) "has been given to me for the orphans, as the result of prayer to God, since the commencement of the work (twenty-five years ago), which sum includes the amount received for the building fund, for the houses already built, and the one to be built. It may also be interesting to the reader to know that the total amount which has been given for the other objects since the commencement of the work, amounts to £38, 297 12*s.* 11*d.*, and that which has come in by the sale of Bibles since the commencement, £2, 222 4*s.* 8*d.* by the sale of Tracts, £2, 294, 6*s*, 11*d*. and the payments of the children in the day schools, from the commencement, £2, 138 11*s*, 4*d*. Besides this, also a great variety and number of articles of clothing, furniture, provisions, &c., have been given for the use of the orphans."

I would state that during the year, eighty-two missionaries have been assisted by grants amounting to £3, 531, 12*s.* 4*d.* by Mr. M.'s Institution, in all parts of the world; four day schools with two hundred and six scholars have been supported and seven others assisted with money or copies of the Holy Scriptures; one Sunday school with one hundred and fifty-seven children supported, and eleven others assisted with Bible and Testaments, and one adult school, numbering ninety-five scholars supported; two thousand and four Bibles and seven hundred and ten Testaments were given away, besides a large number sold at reduced prices, and 1, 334, 791 tracts and books have been circulated.

The report says further:

"Of the four hundred and ninety-nine orphans who were, on May 26th, 1858, in the two houses, two hundred and ninety-six were in the new orphan house No. 1, and two hundred and three in the new orphan house No. 2. The former is fitted up for the accommodation of one hundred and forty orphan girls above seven years of age, eighty boys above seven years, and eighty male and female orphans from their earliest days till they are above seven or eight years of age. The infants, after having passed the age of seven or eight years, are removed into the departments for older boys and girls. The new orphan house No. 2 is fitted up for two hundred female infant orphans, and for two hundred older female orphans. When the cases of the orphans waiting for admission on May 26th, 1857, came before me for investigation, it was found that some of the girls had become too old; some had been otherwise provided for; some had been lost sight of; some we found unsuitable for the Orphan Institution, and some had died while waiting for admission. Thus it comes, that though we had at that time altogether the names of nine hundred and ninety orphans waiting for admission, and received only two hundred and nineteen during the past year; we have now only two hundred and seventy-nine boys and forty-six girls waiting, while we had on May 26, 1858, altogether one hundred and ninety-seven vacancies yet in the new orphan house. As fast as cases can be investigated, and are found suitable, the female orphans are admitted; generally, some are received every week. The reader will see that while there are two hundred and seventy-nine boys waiting for admission without vacancies, we have still many vacancies for female orphans.

'As far as I am able to judge, I have now all I require in the way of pecuniary means for the third house also, so that I am able to accomplish the full enlargement of the orphan work to one thousand orphans.

"Pause, esteemed reader! Nearly seven years had I been, day by day, asking the Lord for the needed means to carry out the desire of my heart, concerning the one thousand orphans. Not a single day had elapsed since first I began to pray for means, in which I had not been enabled in the assurance of faith, yea in the full assurance of faith that it would be granted, to bring my request before God, and generally I had prayed even more than once a day concerning the matter. When I began my request for means, viz., to entreat the Lord to give me thirty-five thousand pounds, I knew well what difficulty there was in the way to my obtaining this sum, looking at it naturally. I am too calm, too calculating a person, too much looking at the matter fully, too much in the habit of weighing all the difficulties of a case, as to be carried away by excitement or imagination. I knew I had no ground naturally to expect this large sum; for months, therefore, I had not prayed at all for means for this enlargement, but had only asked the Lord to show me very clearly whether it was his will that I should go forward; but having once come fully to this conclusion, on the grounds which are stated at large in the report published in 1851, I was as certain that the Lord would give me all I needed, as if I had had the money already in hand. It might, at that time, have been naturally said to me, How will you be likely to obtain this large sum of £35,000 for the Building Fund, and at the same time be able to meet the current expenses of the work already in existence? The reply of faith was, I know not whence the money is to come, but I know that God, on whom I depend, is able to provide me with all I need for the current expenses, and also to give me money for the Building Fund. When twelve and a-half years since, I might say contrary to all my former desires, I was led as by an unseen hand, to decide upon leaving the four rented houses, and to build the new orphan house for three hundred children; it was said, how strange it was that I should think of enlarging the work from one hundred and twenty to three hundred orphans, when for years previously, I had almost habitually had to wait upon the Lord for daily supplies day by day. Yet so it was, that the Lord gave me all I needed for the Building Fund, although that was no less than £15,055 8*s.* 2*d.*, and I had £776 14*s.* 3*d.* more than I required. Moreover, all the current expenses were met in the meantime, and I was able to begin housekeeping with about £500 in hand, whilst before, I had thought of building that large house, we had had rarely, very rarely, as much as £100 in hand, and often, very often, scarce 100 pence. So this time, whilst the means for the Building Fund were coming in, I had to meet the current expenses, which for the orphans alone amounted to £26,249 10*s*, from May 26, 1851, to February 17, 1858, and for the other objects in the same time, £25,670 9*s.* 6*d.*, being altogether, £51,919 19*s.* 6*d.*, and when the new house for 400 orphans was opened on November 12, 1857, I had in hand £2292 0*s.* 1*d.* for the current expenses of the orphans. See, esteemed reader, how unbelief is put to shame, and natural reasoning is confounded. Had I, at my own bidding, or for my own honor, or for the gratification of self, in some way or other begun this enlargement, I could have expected nothing but to be confounded. Or, good though my intentions had been, had I not been called for the work, I could have expected nothing but to be confounded. Or, had I regarded iniquity in my heart, whilst I was seeking to carry out this enlargement, I might have prayed much outwardly, but I should not have had my desires granted as to the obtaining of the means."

FRETTING.—Do not fret! If you are poor, look to the miseries of many who are possessed with wealth, and then thank God for your poverty. If you are sick, there is no necessity for fretting, for the morrow may bring to you health. Have you enemies? If so, don't fret or get in a passion, but strive to outlive their maliciousness and envy by noble deeds. Don't fret if you cannot wear such fine clothes and live in such a big house as your neighbor, but resolve that in whatever state God has placed you, with whatever circumstances he has encompassed you, to be content. It is a short time we have to live at the most. Don't spend it in fretting. There is not much comfort to be taken in this world unless we endeavor to take everything easy.

LONGING FOR HOME.

O when shall I see Jesus,
And in his Kingdom rest;
And join the ransomed host
Of all the good and blest?

O when shall I see Jesus,
And calmly at his side
Behold his heavenly beauty,
With the immortal bride?

O when shall I see Jesus,
And worship at his feet;
When with enraptured pleasure,
Beloved friends I'll greet?

When shall I pluck sweet flowers
From the gardens of delight,
And feast my eyes with rapture
On their rich and pleasing sight?

When shall I pluck fair fruit
From the blessed tree of Life?
When will my gracious Master come,
And end this mortal strife?

If I am faithful to the end,
And all my crosses bear,
Jesus will bid me welcome home,
His love and smiles to share.

Resurrection of Little Children.

Will life never visit their mouldering urn?
Will day never dawn on the night of their grave?
O yes, from the land of the foe they'll return,
For their God is all mighty, and willing to save.

It has been observed several times to me, "Why don't you take up a prominent article of faith and discuss it?" To such I have replied, that I am unfitted for controversy, being too timid as well as too ignorant to stretch out into the broad ocean of theological debate. But if there be one subject which excites my sympathy above another, (always excepting the doctrine of the Atonement,) it is that which relates to the resurrection of little children.

Scarcely is the mind relieved from one horror which has marred the character of God, when another starts to chill us with its gloom. Years ago I had heard the dreadful doctrine propagated, that the lurid pit of hell was swarming with "infants a span long!" The mind turns appalled from the contemplation; but soon reason ignores the fearful heresy, and our souls expand with rapture as we repeat the comforting assurance, "God is Love."

Though among christians generally this dreadful dogma meets with opprobrium, yet even among the Adventists, who claim to have more light than others, there is a doctrine which, though not going to such length as the above, is repugnant to the dearest affection and purest nature of humanity, to the Bible and the manifest purposes of God, and that is, the eternal nothingness of the infant dead.

The only inherent of our nature approved of by Heaven, is the love of parents for their children; and the care which a mother has for the babe which sleeps upon her bosom, is the most striking emblem of that solicitude which the Savior evinces for those weak and trembling ones who draw their life from him. That it is antagonistic to the most tender feelings of the heart, bear witness O ye thousands of bereaved mothers who have looked in anguish upon your darlings, cold in death, and whiter than their shrouds! Who have stood by and seen the little casket shut him from your straining gaze, and felt the screws which fastened on the lid as if they were burying themselves in your own bosom! Who have bent over the cruel grave, and felt the clods which rattled on the coffin beat heavily upon your hearts! Say, then, ye weeping mothers! what is the first sweet consolation which steals into your soul, like the streaks of dawn on a dark and tempestuous night? Answer. "My child shall live again!" Yes, and it is the only comfort which you could then receive, and surely comes from God.

Even those who advocate that no day shall ever break upon the everlasting night which shrouds the infant's grave, say that their feelings are against the chilling doctrine; but the word of God decides the matter otherwise. This I most emphatically deny. Instead of the Bible deciding in favor of the revolting dogma, it is only by straining and distorting the Sacred Word that, in any case, it implies it at all. In the numerous places where both faith and works are jointly laid down as the sine qua non of salvation through Christ, they could not possibly apply to creatures alike unable to exercise the one, or perform the other. But, when little children are particularly spoken of, it is evident that they are objects of especial sympathy and love. For instance, the mothers eagerly pressing forward to have their little ones blessed by our Lord were driven back by the officious disciples, as if their Master were above noticing such puny mortals; but he rebuked with his displeasure their ungracious zeal, and said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." And he took them up in his arms—those arms, by whose strength the universe is sustained, gently entwined around a while from his lips showered blessings upon its unconscious head. Does such an act show that a child, dying in its infancy, should lie unnoticed and uncared for through all eternity, like the ashes of the meanest brute? Shall all those miniatures of the Divine image which the destroyer has broken, lie low, and forgotten melt into irremediable nothingness? Not so; for "thus saith the Lord; A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping; Rahel weeping for her children refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not. Thus saith the Lord; Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy." Jer. 31: 15, 16.

"Lamb of the world's extended fold,"

This passage is beautifully alluded to in connection with the wholesale butchery of Herod; and some who wish to compromise the matter, say that the seed of the righteous will be raised, though they died during their infancy. Are we then to presume that all the slaughtered innocents, whose young blood dyed the reeking sword of the murderer, were the children of righteous parents? This certainly was not the case; for one of the tyrant's own sons fell in the general massacre. Thus every rational inference tends to establish the resurrection of children.

Hearken, then, to the sweeping declaration of Christ himself,—"Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear His (the Son of Man's) voice, and shall come forth." John 5: 28.

And in the winding up of the awful panorama of the Apocalypse, St. John saw the dead small and great stand before God. Rev. 20: 12. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it." 20: 13. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. 15: 26. Will that destruction be complete, or will the "King of Terrors" be granted terms of compromise, and be allowed to hold within his dark domains those sinless ones which his remorseless dart had stricken ere they knew good or evil? No; not a hair of their bright heads shall he retain. The greedy grave must disgorge the least of its prey. Not one small bone shall lie in endless rot. When the trumpet shall sound and the dead are raised, those who have done good and those who knew no evil shall arise together. Because while one who ever breathed the breath of life remains with dust, death is not vanquished, and "the land of the enemy" still holds a captive.

Christ's oft repeated types of heaven and innocence were lambs and little children. And in the lovely picture of the Millennial earth, how beautifully children are brought in to fill the glorious landscape! The snake shall roll his scales of green and gold without his deadly fangs; and beside the den of the cockatrice shall play a weaned child. The lowing of the ox shall mix in harmony with the deep boom of the lion's roar. The leopard and the kid shall lie down together.

"And children straying through the thornless woods,
Shall twine long fetters of the blooming rose,
And with the fragile bonds shall sportive lead
The king of beasts."

To me it seems that if little children were excluded from the kingdom, the kingdom were imperfect. The rose, bud and flower, is beautiful; the shrubs and trees, each in its kind and variety, are beautiful also; so are birds and beasts, and rivers and fields, and stars and rainbows; but to my eye and heart there is nothing so lovely and so loveable, as a beautiful child. Its smile is innocence, and Christ has said "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." JNO. F. COTTON.

What is Life?

Often and often, from my childhood, through my youth upwards, have I asked myself this question, and as often does the response, in a low, mournful cadence, come whispering to my heart, "passing away, passing away!"

I see it in the brilliant but evanescent rainbow, as it melts from the blue vault of heaven—the beautiful flowers that give their fragrance to the air and then wither and die—the soft whispering of the summer wind that tells in low murmurs of the shady dells it has visited, the wild flowers it has kissed, and the leafy trees it has bent in its glad embrace; I see it in the fleecy cloud, whose image, like enchanted land, floats on the bosom of the lake—I hear it in the brook which rushes with a wild song to the river, and the river, which floats majestically on to the ocean, seems ever singing, as it goes "passing away, passing away."

It is written on the smooth pebble by the sea shore, on the lofty ledge which has reared for ages its beetling head against the wild waves of the ocean, on the mountain top, and in the deepest valley, and even low down in the bowels of the earth there are records which tell that all things are "passing away." I hear it now in the low, measured tick of the clock as it lays its finger on each little moment of time—but more than all I hear it in the muffled thobbings of my own heart, which tell in language not to be misunderstood, that youth, health, and life itself are "passing away."

I have been a dreamer through my whole life. In my childhood I dreamed of palaces, with pictured halls and marble fountains, framed in the glorious net-work of nature; of cottages embowered in vines and shubbery, where love and peace went hand in hand; of coral caves, in the depths of the sea, and caverns in the heart of the earth, of unearthly music, and fairies whose touch turned each goblet to gold.

In my youth I have dreamed of life and love in its fullness, when neither care nor grief should touch with its mildew-blight the heart, or chill the fervor of the brain; where the dust and the turmoil of life should be expelled, and the mind find room for expansion amid the silent auxiliaries of nature and art. I have hoped for these until hope has perished, and the dream itself, like a blossom leaning its cheek upon a snow-drift, is among the things which are "passing away."

But now, as I stand in the noon-tide of life, looking back upon the way I have trodden, where sunshine and shade have together held their sway, and on through the unknown vista of the future, another dream comes o'er me. I turn to an ancient record which lies with folded leaves on my table, a record which from olden time has been handed down to man, from the finger of the Almighty God, and there I read that "life is a dream, a vapor, an empty show," that "all is vanity under the sun;" "that which is crooked cannot be made straight, that which is wanting cannot be numbered;" that "all go unto one place; all are of the dust and all turn to dust again."

To go back to nothingness, all our glorious aspirations clipped, hope itself annihilated, the harness of life worn, thrown aside, and the body laid, like that of a beast in the noisome grave! With what horror does the mind recoil from a doom like that!—the blood leaps madly against its barriers, and we exclaim with vehemence, O for immortality beyond the grave!

Again, my fingers run over the leaves of the record, and I read. Far down on the track of time a new era dawns on the world; what prophets had foretold and ancient bards sung, transpires in a little village of the East—the wonderful Advent of the Son of God! And with him, to those who follow his precepts, comes a promise of life beyond the grave; a resurrection from the dead. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

O, what a glorious hope! to rise phœnix-like from the grave, and with "immortality thrilling through every fibre of our being," exclaim, "O! death, where is thy sting? O! grave, where is thy victory!" Then, and then only can the question be truly answered, "what is life!" Let us then dream no more, but with faith and patience, with watchfulness and prayer, so travel on the journey of life, that we may win for ourselves the crown of immortal youth and joy! That when Earth shall be purified by fire, the wilderness made again to blossom as the rose, Paradise restored, and the kingdom of Christ our Lord established over all the earth, we may be permitted the unspeakable privilege of entering in, to go no more out forever and ever.

"The Angel of God."

The angel of the Lord—the angel of God, &c., in the Old Testament, has been supposed to have been our Lord, Messiah, in his pre-existent state.

This may be tested by the use of this or like language in the New Testament. See Matt. 1: 20-24; 2: 13-19; 28: 2; Luke 1: 11; 2: 9; Acts 5: 14; 8: 26; 12: 23. We have the phrase with and without the article TEN TIMES. It so occurs that it CANNOT signify Jesus, the Word, or Christ, because the angel was sent to announce Jesus. The birth of Christ and the course of Joseph into Egypt, and his return, occurred according to the word of the angel.

"The angel strengthened him in his agony, and by consequence could not have been he—the Christ. "The angel of the Lord" came down from heaven and rolled away the stone from the sepulchre at the resurrection of Jesus; therefore this living angel was altogether distinct from Him who rose from the dead.

Surely it is sheer ignorance and great error to assert the popular impression on this point, for the angel of God was neither less or more than God's angel! Amen.

Hence "the Son of God" is only and indeed the Son of God; and that also for the reason given by "the angel." Luke 1: 35. His name is Gabriel. Luke 1: 19; Dan. 8: 9, 10. But "the angel" with Israel "in the wilderness," was Michael. Dan. 10: 13-21; 12: 1; Jude 9; Acts 7; 35. These two appeared together. Dan. 10: 21; 9: 21; 8: 13-14; 1 Pet. 1: 12.

PRESENT SUFFERINGS AND FUTURE JOY.—The sufferings of the just may well be likened to fleeting shadows on passing dreams. As soon as the bright morning of eternity begins to dawn, the shades of mortality are dissipated forever, and they forget at once, in the glorious light of God's majesty, the tribulation that endures but for a night. The unspeakable joys of which they now partake so absorb their souls that there is no room left for sorrow or sufferings. And if their past trials are even remembered by them, it is but to swell their harps with fresh rapture, and to tune their voices to louder and sweeter anthems in the praise of Him, who has given them in exchange for their sufferings endless joy—in exchange for the cross a crown of unfading glory.

☞ There is none can baffle men of sense but fools, on whom they can make no impression.

The Word with God.

JOHN 1: 1, 2.

It is undoubtedly true that the term "word" is generally used, in the sacred scriptures, in the sense of truth spoken by God or man; but this does not prove that it is always so used and must always be so understood. The word "heavens" generally refers to the created firmament above us, yet the apostle uses it to denote the spiritual dispensation in distinction from the Law. Heb. 9: 23.

The proof "that Christ was thus personated" is found in several passages. First, in the connection of the passage, in the third and fourth verses, in which the personal pronouns are applied to the Word, and in the fourteenth, where the Word is recognized as the "only begotten" Son "of the Father," full of grace and truth. Moreover, the same verse declares, that the Word was made flesh, which is true of the Son of God, but not of abstract truth. Rev. 19: 13. It is affirmed that "his name is called the word of God."

As the term God is used in a subordinate sense in the sacred scriptures, in application to rulers inferior to the Supreme, its application to the Word or Son of God is perfectly compatible with the great truth of the divine Unity, and the testimony of Jesus, that the Father is "the only true God." John 17: 1-3; 1 Cor. 8: 6.

The terms word and word of God, are very appropriately applied to his "only begotten" Son. A word is a medium of manifestation of thought or idea. The begotten Son of God is the "One Lord BY whom are all things." The grand medium of the manifestation of Jehovah's perfections. We behold "the light of his glory in the face of Jesus Christ." O let it be our prayer now, to be "changed into the same image" more and more. Let our high and holy praise ascend to the God of salvation, for the precious hope that we shall, at his coming, "see him as he is," and be "like him" forever. H. GREW.

Sound Words.

"Advent faith," "Advent hope," "Advent truth," "Advent glory," "Advent Bible," "Advent preachers," "Advent believers," "Advent movement," "Adventism," "Advent*ists*," "Advents," "Advent*ites*," "Original Advent faith," "Advent conferences," "Advent papers," "Advent churches." There, isn't that a pretty batch of nicknames! What do they all mean? Who gave any such names? Did God? No. Did Christ? No. Did the apostles? No. Have followers of Christ any business with them? No. Is the Lord so poor that he can't afford names for his children? No. Is it "holding fast the form of sound words" to pick up all such names as these? No. Brethren, isn't it best for us to have Bible names for Bible things? Come, let us put away these "childish things"—these relics of carnality, and be christian men and women. Let us hold the truth of God, the faith of Christ, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. Let us have the hope of the gospel, and a gospel name for it. Let us be christians—not mere sectarians; abhoring that which is evil—cleaving to that which is good. I know but two kinds of men in the world—saints and sinners—wheat and tares—righteous and wicked. I am a companion of all them that fear God. What do you say to this "position?" Let Christ, not sect, be honored.

H. L. H.

THE CERTAINTIES OF CHRISTIANITY.—"Behold," says Hannah More, "the heart-consoling, exhilarating, triumphant certainties of Christianity. 'I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand in the latter day upon the earth.' 'In my flesh I shall see God; whom mine eyes shall behold, and not another.' 'I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord, whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die.' Here is the true balm of Gilead—here is the healing cordial for every human woe."

☞ Vice stings us even in our pleasures, but virtue consoles us even in our pains.

For the Crisis.

Bible Order.

Bible men will be in favor of this kind of order in the church. The first question to be settled is, how do men get into the Gospel church? We answer, by faith, and in no other way. Acts 5: 14.—"And believers were added to the Lord." Acts 4: 47.—"And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Again, as in John, "I am the vine; ye are the branches." How do they become branches? by faith. Gal. 3: 26.—"For ye are all the children of GOD by faith in Christ Jesus." Children of God, or in the church, and of course members of it, without any other act only believing, having operative faith. John 1: 12.—"But as many as received him to them gave he power to become sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." Then it ollows that all who have the true faith are members of the true church. The securing of names to be known cannot be urged Biblically. It is by their fruit they are to be known. In taking the INVOICE, fruit only is to be recognised.

Again, the word churches, used so many times in the Bible, what does it denote? Not that there are many kinds of churches denominationally. It is only used on account of their locality. The church of Christ in Rome, in Ephesus, in Corinth, in Philippi, and so on. Hence, in speaking of them collectively, they are called churches. Truthfully they are churches, yet one church.

We next come to bishops, elders and deacons. Some explanation here would relieve us who are called to duty.—What is the difference between elders, bishops and deacons? I see by consulting Timothy, Titus and Peter, the same characteristics are required, with but one exception, "apt to teach." Now are elders and bishops called to the same office? Are they to be set apart and ordained as teachers? Paul declared himself an elder. And if teachers or preachers, can they be ordained till the gifts can be found? Again, if elders and deacons are synonymous terms used to identify the scriptural persons to look after the interest of the church, her wants, her needs, her widows, with her poor, and every department, to make her more vigorous and healthy, then it can be seen there is a difference in the office and in the work. And if we find them providentially in the church at work, shall we not say Amen? I believe the Bible to be a perfect rule of faith and practice, and the closer we follow this rule, the better for Christ and his precious cause. Instruction, reproof, correction enough here, to thoroughly furnish to all good works. Then do not let us get out of order in trying to get in.

Suppose the necessity of a paper with names attached is urged upon the church, and a part cannot conscientiously sign it, the majority carry it, and move on. Now who are "the church?" They say we, whose names are attached. And this has divided the church. But suppose it is said all we who have not signed, and who have, who live as the grace of God teaches, righteously and godly in this present world? Then the names have accomplished no purpose. I may be fearful, but I have not forgotten the time when I with others came out of creed bondage into gospel liberty. Now then thirty of us being together as a church, it was inquired if any thing more was necessary to give us Bible order. We had elders and deacons. Names were thought needful by some to identify and keep us together. An old pilgrim father who was with us, who had lived four score winters, his locks had grown grey in the service of Christ, having leaped the partition walls, with caution, weakness and earnest solicitation, inquired of the Elder—"Is it required Biblically?" No requirement was the reply. [illegible] to the Bible.

☞ [illegible]

For the Crisis.

The Day of the Crucifixion.

The only reason why Friday has been fixed on as the day of the crucifixion, is because it is recorded by the Evangelists that the crucifixion was followed by a Sabbath; and it is inferred that that Sabbath was the seventh day. But it does not follow that it was the seventh day Sabbath, from the fact that the Jews had other Sabbaths besides the seventh day; and also from the fact that this inference is in direct contact with positive statements; as will be seen hereafter.

That the crucifixion was the day before the Paschal Sabbath, there is abundant proof; and also, that the Passover Sabbath was on the fifteenth day of the first month, is evident from the following: Lev. 23: 5, 7.—"In the fourteenth day of the first month, at even, is the Lord's Passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord: seven days ye must eat unleavened bread. In the first day ye shall have an holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein." Ex. 12: 17.—"And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; for in this self same day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt: therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations by an ordinance forever."

According to the 12th of Exodus, the Paschal Lamb was to be killed in the end of the fourteenth day, and they were to eat it in the night following; and the day with the Jews ended at sunset; (for in the account of the creation of the world, it is said: "The evening and the morning were the first day;") so that the feast of the passover began in the commencement of the fifteenth day; consequently it synchronises with the feast of unleavened bread. And of this day it is said: "ye shall do no servile work therein;" hence it was a Sabbath. And that this was the Sabbath that followed the crucifixion, is evident from John 18: 28, which reads thus: "Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the hall of Judgment: and it was early: and they themselves went not into the judgment hall lest they should be defiled, but that they might eat the Passover."

Those who were defiled could not keep the passover in the first month, but had to postpone it unto the second month. (See Num. 9: 5, 12. And this is the reason why the Jews went not into the judgment hall lest they should be defiled, but that they might eat the passover, showing conclusively that the crucifixion was before the feast of the passover. Again, John 19: 14, reads thus:—"And it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King."

According to Deut. 16: 4, there was to be no leavened bread found in their land for seven days; consequently the preparation of the passover was the day preceding the feast in which they cleansed their houses from all leaven, and prepared to sacrifice the Paschal lamb. The Lord's Supper being instituted the night previous, it would be in the commencement of the fourteenth day, while "Christ our Passover was sacrificed for us" in the end of the fourteenth day, which makes the type and antitype agree in the time. Again, it is evident from Mark 14: 1, 2, that the real passover was not eaten by the Jews at the time Christ instituted, the last supper," because, he says: "After two days was the feast of passover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him by craft and put him to death. But they said, not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar among the people."

Their design was to put him to death before the feast began, as all the people were gathered together annually to this feast; and they feared an uproar among the multitude of people if he was put to death on the feast day when they would be gathered together. The last supper could not therefore have been the true passover, as the crucifixion would then have been on the feast day; whereas they said, not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar among the people. And that their design succeeded is evident from the above quotations from John. Now having shown that Christ was crucified on "the preparation of the passover," and before the feast day began, and also that that feast day was a Sabbath; the following passage will be seen to apply not to the seventh day, but to the Passover Sabbath. John 19: 31.—"The Jews, therefore, because it was the Preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the Sabbath, (for that Sabbath was an high day) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away."

The word day does not occur but once in this verse, in the original Greek; and the above is a more literal rendering than the common version. "That Sabbath was an high day;" for it was a yearly Sabbath to commemorate their deliverance from Egyptian bondage. That it was not the seventh day Sabbath is evident from Matt. 27: 62–66, which reads thus: "Now the next day, that followed the day of the Preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, saying, sir, we remember that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, after three days I will arise again. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night and steal him away, and say unto the people he is risen from the dead, so the last error shall be worse than the first. Pilate said unto them, ye have a watch: go your way, make it as sure as ye can. So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone and setting a watch."

There are two good reasons against its being the seventh day Sabbath. They made the sepulchre sure "until the third day," because he said he would rise "after three days;" whereas, had it been the seventh day, his resurrection would have been after two days; as he rose the first day of the week, or Sunday, or the second day after his death. And again; the Pharisees would have also broken the seventh day Sabbath, of which they professed to be strict observers; while admitting it to have been the Passover Sabbath, and not the seventh day, the difficulty vanishes. But the translators have not translated Mark 15: 42 literally; for literally translated, it would read thus: And already even had come, because it was Preparation, that is, before Sabbath. They render it—"And now when the even was come, because it was the Preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath;" and by thus making it more definite than the original, they favor the inference that it was the seventh day sabbath.

And here we may state what is true, that the word Sabbath in the Greek is used to represent the week; both the end of the week, and the first of the week. So that when it is said, "In the end of the Sabbath, as it begun to dawn towards the first day of the week," it is literally, "In the end of the week, as it began to dawn toward the first of the week." So then a passage of that kind does not favor the inference that the seventh day Sabbath followed the day of Christ's death.

Now Luke gives an account of Christ's death, and says, "Joseph of Arimathea went to Pilate and begged the body of Jesus. And he took it down and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepulchre, that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid. And that day was the Preparation and Sabbaton epephoske"—literally, and Sabbaths began to light up. This shows that as soon as the burial of Christ was completed, a Sabbath began; it was not, therefore, the seventh day Sabbath; for in this case he would have been in the grave only two days and two nights; whereas Jesus said to the Jews: "As Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." Matt. 12: 40. Thus, by the authority of Christ himself, Thursday was the day he was crucified; for Thursday night and Friday is one day, Friday night and Saturday two days, Saturday night and Sunday (when he arose) three days and three nights.

Again, according to Luke, the same day that Christ arose, the two disciples on their way to Emmaus said to Jesus, not knowing him, "The chief priests and rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him. But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel; and besides all this, to-day is the third day since these things were done."—Luke 24: 18–22. Now if Christ was crucified on Thursday, Sunday could be said to be "the third day since these things were done." It could not therefore have been on Friday, for it cannot be that Friday is the first day since Friday, which must be in order to have Sunday the third day since. Therefore he was crucified Thursday, the day before the Passover Sabbath.

The Soul.—No. 8.

Having examined the first fourteen examples in the Bible, where the word nephesh, soul, occurs, and found no intimation that it represents an immortal part in man, but applicable alike to man and beast, representing,

1. The whole being, whether man or beast;

2. The principle of life, common to all living creatures;

We pass now to the 15th text where the word occurs, which is in Gen. 12: 13. "Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister; that it may be well with me for thy sake; and my soul shall live because of thee." The plain inference from this passage is, that he feared his soul would not live unless the advice given be followed. What is the meaning of the phrase, "my soul," which frequently occurs in the Bible? Some seem to have the idea it represents an immortal part, which exists independently of the body, and at death goes to heaven or a hell of suffering. We think the truth on this subject will be very plain after a little examination. It is proper to substitute life for soul in any passage in the Bible, where it will make sense. We often hear the expression, "we should live a life of virtue," so, in the passage under consideration, it would be correct to say, "and my life shall live;" or, in other words, I shall live, myself shall live.

We now assume that, "my soul," "me" and "myself" are synonymous expressions. Num. 23: 10. "Let me (margin, my soul) die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." Here we see that "me," from nephesh, means the same as "my soul." Either form is correct. Had our translators rendered nephesh soul, in this passage, it would have overthrown the idea that the soul is immortal. Again, 1 Kings 20: 32. "So they girded sackcloth on their loins, and put ropes on their heads, and came to the king of Israel, and said, thy servant Ben-haded saith, I pray thee let me (nephesh) live." Ps. 59: 3. "For, lo, they lie in wait for my soul; the mighty are gathered against me." Ps. 35: 13. "I humbled my soul with fasting." Does an immortal soul that can exist independently of an organism, become humbled by fasting? The plain meaning of the passage is, that David humbled himself by fasting. When he says, "they lie in wait for my soul," the obvious meaning is, "they lie in wait for" me, or my life, not for an immortal soul hid away in some obscure recess of David's body. Ps. 131: 2. "Surely I have behaved and quieted myself (margin, my soul) as a child that is weaned of his mother." Here we have nephesh rendered myself, which gives the correct idea. Jude 16: 30. "And Sampson said, "Let me (marg. my soul) die with the Philistines." In this passage, nephesh is rendered "me." The marginal reading shows that the soul may die, and there is no way to avoid the conclusion that what is represented by the word nephesh may die, whether it be a part of the man, or the whole being.

When David used the phrase, "my soul," it is evident he did not mean another man in himself. From passages quoted, we think it is clear that "my soul," "me" and "myself," when translated from nephesh, mean the same thing—the whole man—as when the word is first employed to represent him in Gen. 2: 7.

Jer. 18: 20. "Shall evil be recompensed for good? for they have digged a pit for my soul." Let us turn to the place where we have a record of the consummation of the event referred to in this passage. Jer. 38: 6. "Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him into the dungeon of Malchiah." The last passage quoted shows that the "my soul" which was to be cast into the pit was the man Jeremiah.

We think this point is plain; and if the phrase, "my soul," is equivalent to "me" and "myself," we should naturally conclude that "his soul" means the same as himself or he.

What saith the Scripture? Rev. 16: 26. "He (nephesh) that laboreth, laboreth for himself." In the margin we have soul instead of the word he. Ps. 105: 17–18. "He sent a man before them, even Joseph, who was sold for a servant; whose feet they hurt with fetters; he (nephesh, margin, his soul,) was laid in iron." No one supposes that Joseph had an immortal soul which "was laid in iron." But the nephesh—the man Joseph—"was laid in iron." Gen. 37: 21. "And Reuben heard it, and he delivered him out of their hands; and said, let us not kill him, (nephesh.) In this Scripture nephesh is rendered him, and it is plainly shown that the nephesh or man may be killed. Again, in Deut. 19: 6, we read, "Lest the avenger of blood pursue the slayer, while his heart is hot, and overtake him, because the way is long, and slay him," (nephesh.) Ps. 22: 29. "None can keep alive his own soul." Should we conclude from this passage that the soul is immortal and can never die? 1 Kings 19: 4. "And he (Elijah) requested for himself (nephesh) that he might die." This text shows that nephesh stands for the whole man, and that himself is equivalent to "his soul." Amos 2: 14. "Neither shall the mighty deliver himself," (nephesh, margin, his soul.) Job 18: 4. "He teareth himself, (nephesh, marg. his soul) in his anger." Does he tear his immortal soul? Job 32: 2. "He justified himself (nephesh, margin, his soul) rather than God." We do not see how further quotations can make it plainer that "his soul" is synonymous with "himself," "he" and "him," each meaning the whole man.

The same remarks are true of "our soul." Ps. 35: 25. "Let them not say in their hearts, ah, so would we (nephesh, marg. our soul) have it."

Again, "your souls" means the same as yourselves. Lev. 11: 43. "Ye shall not make yourselves (nephesh, margin, your souls) abominable with any creeping thing." Jer. 37: 9. "Thus saith the Lord, deceive not yourselves (nephesh, marg. your souls.) Many similar examples might be brought if necessary.

We will look at few passages where the phrase "their soul" is equivalent to themselves." Esther 9: 31. "As they had decreed for themselves," (nephesh, margin, their souls.) Isa. 46: 2. "Themselves (nephesh, margin, their soul) are gone into captivity." Isa. 47: 14. "They shall not deliver themselves (nephesh, marg. their souls) from the power of the flame." Job 36: 14. "They (nephesh their soul) die in youth." Here it is again plainly taught that souls die.

The same remarks are true of "her soul" and "thy soul." Her soul and herself are used interchangeably, and thy soul and thyself.

In the examples we have been considering, we have the primary use of nephesh, which represents the whole being. Whenever we say, "O my soul, praise the Lord," it is equivalent to saying, O me, or myself, praise the Lord; but the latter is not so elegant. When we say, "Our souls are sad," it is the same as to say, we are sad.

We come back to Gen. 12, 13: having examined the first fifteen passages in the Bible where the word nephesh occurs, but do not yet find any proof of an immortal soul in man.

Meetings at Poultney, Vt.

Our first meeting in this place was on Lord's day, Sept. 26, 1858, at which time we had a very intelligent and attentive congregation to listen in the morning to the reward of the righteous, and in the afternoon, the punishment of the wicked.

Poultney is a pleasant village, located on the Rutland and Troy R. R., 18 miles from the former place. It is the seat of Troy Conference Academy, a flourishing institution, in a very eligible situation.

The cause of Christ has been low in this place for several years, but God is doing a great work here at the present time. In compliance with a petition from several prominent citizens, who were not professors of religion, we commenced meetings again on Lord's day, Nov. 21st, and have continued them every evening till the present, (Nov. 26th.) We think we have never seen a place more thoroughly aroused upon religious subjects, than this is now. Every body appears to be interested in some way. At first great prejudice and opposition was manifested towards the doctrine of life only through Christ. The Methodists refused to read a notice of our meetings, and said many hard things, as well as members of other churches. At first not a single professor of religion extended a friendly hand, or invited us to call and see them. We made home with a noble-hearted gentleman, who had made no profession of religion, where we were kindly cared for by himself and his christian wife. As we brought out the truth of the Lord, several preachers did their best to convince the people that we were preaching heresy. Some came out boldly and met us like men, face to face in our meetings, while others fought out of sight. But the Spirit of the Lord God was present to give edge and point to the truth, and it took strong hold upon the people. Large congregations assembled, and on Tuesday evening, (Nov. 23) we got enough together to hold a prayer meeting before preaching; and at the close, we had another, when one rose for prayers.

The next evening four presented themselves for prayers, and since that time the interest has continued to increase, and about a dozen have been converted, and testified for Jesus. Quite a good number of backsliders have been reclaimed, and a host of people are under conviction; yet, we trust that the work has only just begun.

Prejudice has vanished like dew before the sun, and those who were most bitterly opposed are now united heart and hand in the work. The Methodist Church that refused to give the notice have extended an official invitation to have the meetings moved from Union Hall to their house, where we may preach without any restriction. We think we have never seen a greater revolution in one week in a place, than in this. Those who have not spoken to each other for years, are now warm friends again. The truth is spreading with great power and effect. Thus far, every one that has been converted, so far as we have been able to ascertain, was awakened by the preaching on the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked, and life only through Christ. All say, "It is the goodness of God that has led me to repentance." It is truly heart-cheering to hear them express their love for God. One who has preached the Gospel, says he never saw the lovely character of the Lord as it now appears, since he has seen the truth on the subject of punishment. A noble hearted man, who has just found peace, says he was the most wicked man in the place, and the people were surprised when they saw him rise for prayers. When speaking of his conviction, he remarked, that the preaching of eternal misery had no effect on him, and was certain he should never have been moved under such preaching; but when he saw that God, in mercy, would destroy the wicked, he was melted by a consideration of his goodness. We see the same happy results wherever we have presented it, and we are more and more satisfied that the preaching of the doctrine of eternal misery has made more infidels, and dishonored God more than any other ever advocated by our fallen race. But, if the soul be immortal, there is no way to avoid the conclusion that the wicked must be eternally miserable.

We feel resolved, in the strength of the Lord, to preach, write and talk against the monstrous heresy, so long as our kind heavenly Father allows us to breathe the breath of life. We have counted the cost, and our trust is in the Holy One of Israel. It is too late to make any compromise between truth and error; but it is very important that we present the truth in kindness, as well as with firmness. The truth always suffers unless it is delivered in love.

The Awful Curse.

"If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema Maran-atha." 1 Cor. 16: 22.

Before proceeding to notice this passage, we may remark, that the system of divine truth, denominated the gospel, abounds in promises to fallen man. When we fully acquaint ourselves with its sacred contents, there is no one thing with which we feel so fully impressed as that it respects every condition of fallen humanity, that it has to do, in the provision it has made, with all the ills of human life. And the fact that it is so full in its provision, so extensive in its application, so impartial in its offers and perfect in its results, shows it to be of divine origin. Never was it in the power of mortals to devise a system like it, otherwise it would have been done. Efforts have not been wanting in past ages in this direction certainly. And as it regards the present age, common observation may discover, that one of the most distinguishing features of what is called "progression" is the leaving or forsaking of the "Fountain of living waters," and hewing out "broken cisterns that can hold no water." The nature of their works show they are seeking to climb up "some other way."

It is well for poor mortals that the Being with whom they have to do, is of great mercy and compassion. Indeed, the distinguishing feature of mercy's plan is that Christ died for his enemies. "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners Christ died for the ungodly." This thought should always find a prominent place in the preacher's discourse. The more we dwell on this theme the better. We can never go beyond the bounds of his love; it is infinite and eternal like himself.

The character referred to in the passage is man. "If any man love not," &c.

The gospel has no respect of persons. It judges not of class, but character. There is no difference between Jew and Greek. The same Lord over all, is rich unto all that call on his name. In speaking, however, of those who do not love Christ, we too often refer to individuals who are guilty of outbreaking sins; or, to the sceptic, who denies revelation. But why should the mind rest with those classes, seeing their doom is sure, their fate certain? Are there not hundreds and thousands who, to all human appearance, maintain a moral life, and yet are destitute of that love which is a prerequisite to salvation? They are destitute of his love, for they do not keep his commandments, an exemplification of which is a sure sign of this indwelling love. Not to recognize Christ as the centre and source of all good in this work of salvation, is to give evidence of a weakness which can scarcely be tolerated. To have a system which only has enough Christ in it, simply to initiate it into the family of religions known under the term "nominal christianity," is to have the name but not the resemblance. It is worse; it is to > "Steal the livery of the court of heaven

> To serve the devil in."

It is to have a house without a foundation; and however perfect the architecture, it is no proof against the raging elements. It is built upon the sand and will fall. Studied essays and philosophical arguments, can never add virtue to such a system; can never reach the heart, and hence, can never save one soul.

The fact is, men spend more time and money to see how they can get along without Christ, than to be saved by Christ.—They do not love to yield to him, to give themselves to his service. If there be any submission to Christ, it is not hearty, but partial, and circumstantial at that. There is some good to be secured, or some evil to be avoided, which requires it for the time being. The great trouble is, the heart is not in the matter, the man has not been fully immersed in the spirit of the truth. He may plead his virtue, his morals, or his good life, but if he have not the Lord Jesus Christ, this fearful threatening is out against him. He may have had a love for him in time past, but he must love now. It is not only a personal, but a practical and present work. If he love not, let him be anathema—accursed. That is, let him be cut off and "devoted to punishment.' He must lose the joys of heaven—of glory. He has shown himself unworthy the society of the redeemed. Life is forfeited, and destruction is visited upon him.

Maran-atha, i. e., "The Lord is coming." The anathema or curse has been pronounced, and the time when the curse shall be carried into effect is when the Lord comes. For, "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all; and to convince all the ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds." This is the doom of the workers of iniquity. Would we escape this awful curse, we must love virtue and cleave fast to Christ. He is the saint's hiding-place, and will save them in the hour of trial.

Working and Thinking.

It is a no less fatal error to despise labor when regulated by intellect, than to value it for its own sake. We are always, in these days, trying to separate the two; we want one man to be always thinking and another to be always working, and we call one a gentleman and the other an operative; whereas the working man ought always to to be thinking, and the thinker often to be working; and both should be gentlemen in the best sense. As it is, we make both ungentle, the one envying, the other despising his brother; and the mass of society is made up of morbid thinkers and miserable workers. Now it is only by labor that thought can be made healthy, and only by thought that labor can be made happy, and the two cannot be separated with impunity. All professors should be liberal, and there should be less pride felt in peculiarity of employment, and more in excellence of achievment.—Ruskin.

Fret not.—A sensible physician once remarked, that the most efficient cause of death in this country is fretting. This habit seems almost inseparable from the impatient enterprise of the American character.

VOL. VIII. NO. 14. THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

For the Crisis.

The Two-Horned Beast.—No. 4.

"This infernal power will now bring into the most furious operation his new and master engine against the church, because he learns that the kingdom of Christ is at the door." p. 45.

The Devil will never give up his hold on this world without a struggle, in which all of his available powers will be engaged. Neither will it be less effective under the reign of this two-horned beast power than under the Pagan, or Papal power; with this difference; this last is but momentary; but be assured that the final conflict will not find him wanting in energy or malice.

"What has given rise to the well-known maxim, 'The darkest time is just before day?'—The severest struggle is often just before relief comes. This idea has been found true in the greatest and smaller events. When the Devil found he was about to be cast out of the youth brought to Christ, (Matt. 9 : 20,) he exerted all his violence upon the unhappy subject. He threw him down, cried out, tore him, yea rent him sore, and left him as dead. The reason is evident; it was his last time." Deliverance will come in a time of necessity, not in a time of triumph of the church.

The importunate widow—"the crying day and night"—"a time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation," (Dan. 12 : 1)—"the dark and cloudy day" of Ezek. 34, all indicate "trial;" and thus, says Daniel, are purified, made white and TRIED. But none is more significant than Rev. 14, when the last message to the world is given. Warning (says Mr. Smith p. 183) is given concerning all who worship the beast or receive his mark. This bold warning through the church must be very offensive to those who are implicated. Infidel powers, or Antichristian Babylon, and those who partake of her sins, and are now notified of it, and that they are about to receive of her plagues, will be far from taking this in good part from the witnesses of Christ, and God only knows what the former will now be enraged to do against the latter! The texts which follow are indicative of evil to the church. Verses 12 and 13; "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

Here the patience of the saints is to be tried. Now it is to be known who keep the commands of God and have the faith of Christ. Now the voice from heaven announces, that from henceforth and while the troubles then overwhelming the church shall continue, peculiarly blessed are the pious, who find rest in their graves. The cruelties of the enemies of the church here indicated soon demand the presence of the Captain of her salvation. The next verse accordingly presents him upon the white cloud with his sharp sickle.

The first message separated some for the "watch tower."

The second showed the fall of Babylon; and her power being ended she could only threaten the messengers.

The third will discover who will seek to save their lives, and a POWER ripe for "perdition." O for wisdom to count the "number!"

H. PRATT.

THE ROOT OF EVIL.—The following sensible paragraph is from the Newark Daily Advertiser:

"One thing is as clear as the sun, that the absorbing ambition to seize the glittering prize of gold was never before so prolific a root of evil as it is now. We do not know which is working the greatest mischief among us, the lust for political power or the lust of pelf. When we come to add to this burning appetite in so many men, the powerful, almost supernatural energy communicated to it by the vicious tastes and demands of families for luxury, show and extravagance to rival other families, and win an absurd distinction, founded upon nothing better than money, it is not difficult to account for many of these astounding falls from virtue and high moral position, and their accompaning defalcations, which occasionally convulse society."

WHICH IS MAD?—If a man were every day to throw a purse of money, or even a single guinea in the sea, he would be looked upon as a madman and his friends would soon confine him as such. But a man who throws away that which is of more value than gold, than mines, than the whole world,—even his health, his peace, his time, his soul; such an one is admired, esteemed, and applauded by the greater part of the world!

From the Islands.

BRO. GRANT:—I received a bundle of tracts last week, and from the express mark, I concluded they must come from Boston. Whoever is the donor, has my unfeigned hearty thanks. May the good Lord bless that liberal soul. And while they have watered others, may they also be watered. While they have scattered, may they increase, until their souls shall become like a well watered garden, even like the chariot of Aminadab, yes, and they find it "more blessed to give than to receive."

O! it filled my whole soul with joy and gratitude. I fell upon my knees, and thanked God, when I had received them, and opened and seen their contents, and found they were just what I needed. Had I selected them myself, I could not have suited myself better. I praised God with all my heart, that he had disposed some of his children to consider my case, and the wants of the cause in these Islands, where minds are open to receive these long neglected Bible truths. I had just given away my last tract, for I had had a few with me, which I had to use very sparingly, leaving one in a neighborhood; and that one was just like a missionary, going from house to house.

A great interest had been produced here by the course Bro. King, a Methodist preacher here took, in opposition to the truths contained in one of my tracts, on the state of the dead, and destruction of the wicked. He read extracts from it himself, and made many remarks from it, and against it, in the pulpit, and it set everybody to talking, and inquiring about the subject. They wanted to know what the awful tract was, what it contained, and on what proof it rested, and it was very natural and right that they should do so, and they found some of them, at least, to be simple Bible doctrine.

Last Sabbath I gave three lectures at South West Harbor, where the excitement had been very general, to a crowded congregation. I seldom ever had a greater burden resting on me; and I never experienced greater help from God, or had a more attentive, candid audience.

Yesterday I commenced scattering my precious gift, the tracts, and could the donor see the joy it produces in my own breast and the tears of gratitude which are shed, and the pleasure and willingness with which they receive the tracts and the promise to read and investigate, he or she would feel well paid. I have now ten Islands, making five townships, which are open freely. I have free access to every meeting house, and school house, and every family too. I have all the privilege any man could ask, to comfort and instruct; and O for the wisdom which comes from above, which is profitable to direct. Pray for unworthy me, dear Bro. Grant, and all ye brethren and sisters, who love Jesus, and love his truths, and rejoice to see them spread far and wide.

Yours with gratitude,

BENJAMIN SPAULDING.

Mt. Desert, Me., Nov. 30th.

From Bro. C. F. Churchil

BRO. GRANT:—It has been some time since I penned a line for the waiting ones scattered abroad. I should like to speak some word of encouragement to cheer their hearts a little longer. Dear brethren and sisters, faint not. "Let not your hearts be troubled," saith the heavenly Jesus; "ye believe in God, believe also in me; in my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you; I go to prepare a place for you: and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you to myself; that where I am there ye may be also." Blessed promise! "And behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." These are cheering promises, and soon will they be realized. Soon we shall behold the heavenly Promiser, and be like him; for we shall see him as he is. Soon our trials and wanderings will have an end. Soon the warfare will end. Soon we shall be where the weary rest, and the wicked cease from troubling. Home, with all its loveliness, appears in view, with the King in his beauty, and its peaceful inhabitants; for they shall be all righteous; neither shall they die any more. O blissful home! God grant that we all may share it among the blest, is my prayer.

Scatter the Seed.

If the husbandman sow not, his faith must indeed be strong if he expects to reap an abundant harvest. It may justly be affirmed that much is lost that is sown; but it should be a sufficient reward to know all is not lost, when there is but one way in which any thing can be saved. The ways to destroy are comprehended in the term diversity; but there is but one way to life—one plan of salvation—"One Lord, one Faith, one Baptism." How beautifully and how forcibly is this fact set forth by our dear Savior in the parable of the sower. He scattered the seed with a liberal hand, with a hope that some might fall in pleasant places; and, although some fell among thorns, and some by the wayside, and some in stony places, yet blessed be the Lord, some fell upon good ground, and brought forth fruit, some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold. Many ways to destruction, but one way to life. Are we all walking in it? God grant it. And if we are, how imperative is the duty enjoined upon us to labor in the vineyard of the Master.

"Be instant in season and out of season." Scatter the seed abundantly. Mayhap, one seed may fall in good ground, and then will your heart leap within you for joy that you have profited the Master. What are we profited if we know the truth, and spread it not? Remember the parable of the talents and the unprofitable servant. He knew that his master was a hard man, reaping where he had not sown, and yet he hid his talent in the earth, neglecting to make a profitable use of it, while those of his fellow servants who had used the talents committed to them in a profitable manner, were themselves profited much. With these truths in our minds, let us strive continually to increase the harvest of the Lord.

Several years ago, some of the seed fell in this place and took root, and although its growth has been slow, still does it increase and bring forth fruit. Our numbers are yet few, but they are devoted to the truth, and have at last made arrangements to have that truth they love preached to those who will listen.

Two weeks ago, last Lord's day, Bro. G. W. Stetson preached twice, and an appointment was given out for every fourth Sabbath, at least during the present winter. His preaching was powerful, and from its continuance we have every reason to hope that much good will result. Quite a number are quietly investigating, and with them the victory is already won; it may not declare itself for awhile, but truth must triumph, when honestly sought.

Should any of the preaching brethren be journeying this way, they are earnestly requested to stop with us. A. H. B.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO—ATTACK ON THE CAPITAL BY THE LIBERALS.—WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—The steamship Gen. Rusk, which arrived at New Orleans on Sunday last, brought the Brownsville (Texas) Flag, which says that Gen. Blanco of the Liberal party, with an army of 1500 men, attacked and entered the City of Mexico, advancing to within one block of the Capitol, Oct. 13. Gen. Zuloaga made an imposing resistance, and lost 400 of his soldiers, beside having a large number wounded. The loss on the part of the Liberals was comparatively small. Gen. Blanco held his position for a few hours, and then retired to Tamboga, where he remained encamped at last accounts. The city would have been completely captured by the Liberals, but the partisans within, upon whose movements the whole triumph depended, not being previously advised of the intended attack, were not prepared to render any efficient aid. The Liberal forces were concentrating about the Capitol with a force sufficient to render its capture inevitable. The whole republic, with the exception of the Capitol, is now in possession of the Liberals. Gen. Eequegaray was severely wounded, in a daring attempt to capture the Castle of Perote with a handful of men. Another account says, that Zuloaga had only about 1000 men, while the other had 3000, and that with a little exertion the latter might have taken the City of Mexico.

THE POPULATION OF THE GLOBE.—A distinguished Professor of the University of Berlin has lately produced a paper in relation to the population of the world, which is believed to be more reliable than anything which has yet appeared on this subject. After some detailed estimates in regard to the five great divisions of the world, he arrives at the conclusion that the present population is about twelve hundred and eighty-three millions, as follows:

Population of Europe, 272,000,000; of Asia, 720,000,000; of America, 200,000,000; of Africa, 89,000,000; of Australia, 2,000,000. Total population of the globe, 1,283,000,000.

The average number of deaths per annum, in certain places where records are kept, is is about one to every forty inhabitants. At the present time the number of deaths in a year would be about 32,000,000, which is more than the entire present population of the United States. At this rate the average number of deaths per day, is about 87,761, the average per hour about 3653, the average per minute 61. Thus, at least every second, a human life is ended. As the births considerably exceed the deaths, there are probably 70 or 80 human beings born per minute.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in So. Hope, Me., Oct. 29th, of consumption, Sister ANN BOWLEY, wife of Robert Bowley, aged thirty-five years.

Sr. Bowley was deeply wrought upon by the Spirit of God some years ago, but with many others, in a time of religious declension, her faith and love grew cold. During the winter, nearly five years ago, she was again awakened, and took a decided stand on the side of the Lord and his truth. She was one of those who looked with confidence to the autumn of 1854, for the consummation of her hope. Ever constant in her attendance on the means of grace, and ever ready to speak of the goodness of God in the presence of his people, she was at that time one of our most faithful ones. Since that time she has had many severe trials; her husband left her seven years ago for California, since which time she has had the care of her four children, and faithfully has she discharged the duties that have devolved upon her. She has been a devoted and affectionate wife, a judicious and exemplary mother, a kind and faithful friend.

Her funeral was attended by Elder S. K. Partridge, who addressed a large and attentive audience, from 1. Pet. 1 : 23.

AMELIA CRABTREE.

Died, in Bridgeport, Conn., Nov. 16th, JOHN H. ATHERTON, aged 7 years, one month and 12 days.

In a little over two short months, two of our little ones have been taken away by death. But I rejoice in the hope of soon seeing Jesus, when the dead shall be raised, and come forth robed with immortality. We mourn not as those that have no hope. Praise the Lord. In the midst of my affliction I can lift up my heart to God and cry, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." Usher in the glad day, when earth shall be changed, and the promise that was made to Abraham and his seed shall be fully realized, and Jesus shall take the kingdom, and his saints possess it forever and ever.

JESSE H. ATHERTON.

Died, in Monson, Mass., Nov. 21st, 1858, Mr. ETHAN BLISS, aged 69 years.

The subject of this notice, my dear husband, was a believer in the sleep of the dead and the immediate appearing of the Savior, with kindred truths. His disease was typhoid fever. His funeral was attended by a Methodist minister. Text, Job 7 : 16.

LUCINA BLISS.

Died, in Portsmouth, N. H., MARY ALBERTINA, only child of brother and sister Wolcott, aged seven years and two months.

Parents, thy hopes are blasted now,
Thy loved one in the grave laid low;
The cherished object of thy care
No more can pain or pleasure share.

Till Jesus comes her sleep is blest,
No tumult can disturb her rest,
Save when the last loud trumpet's sound
Shall wake the millions in the ground.

Faith views a world of glory near,
Where Jesus wipes away each tear;
There, where no sorrow comes, or pain,
The loved of earth shall meet again.

Then sorrow not as others do,
With such a blessed hope in view;
For "Tina" loved the Savior here,
And soon with him she will appear.

Died, in Lynn, Sept. 30th, MARTHA E. THOMAS, daughter of J. Wesley, and Nancy Thomas, aged 7 months and 9 days.

Father, mother, you are lonely
  Since your babe has gone to rest;
But be patient, you shall meet her
  In the land that's ever blest.

Let your trusting faith now centre
  On the waking of the dead;
When with joy you hope to greet her,
  Where no farewell tears are shed.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

"ON THIS DREARY EARTH."

AIR—"We are coming, sister Mary."

On this dreary earth I wander, a pilgrim sad and lone,
I am looking for the Savior to come and take me home;
O, the happy day is coming, I long to be away,
And in my contemplation methinks I hear him say;
CHO.—I am coming, lonely pilgrim, I am coming by and by,
Are you ready, lonely pilgrim? for the time is drawing nigh.

Then we'll be up and doing, and in the Lord be strong,
Be waiting, watching, praying, for the time will not be long
When Christ shall come in glory, then we shall with him stay,
And reign with him forever in bright, eternal day.
CHO.—For he's coming, lonely pilgrim, he's coming by and by,
Are you ready, lonely pilgrim? for the time is drawing nigh.

O, what a glorious meeting, when life's trials all are o'er,
O what delightful greeting with our friends on Canaan's shore;
Then we'll pray, and strive, and struggle, till the victory is won,
We'll not lay down our armor till our labor all is done.
CHO.—For he's coming, &c.

We have some loved ones sleeping beneath the cold, cold ground,
But we shall cease our weeping when the last trump shall sound;
For in immortal beauty they'll soon arise and sing
In joyful strains of triumph to our exalted King.
CHO.—For he's coming, &c.

In this dark world of sorrow our hearts are often pained,
But nothing shall disturb us when that bright world we've gained;
No deep heart-riven anguish, no pain or death to fear,
No parting there with dear ones, no silent, farewell tear.
CHO.—O, he's coming, &c.

When we've reached that blissful kingdom, and joined the blood-washed band,
And to all the dear beloved ones extend pure friendship's hand,
We'll wear the crown of glory, and the palm of victory bear,
While music most delightful shall fill the balmy air.
CHO.—For he's coming, &c.

Thoughts on Eccl. 12 : 7.

In our first article on Eccl. 12 : 7, our inquiry was, whether Solomon, in the language therein employed, taught the doctrine of the soul's immortality without a resurrection. We now proceed to inquire whether Solomon, David, Job, or the patriarchs, taught that doctrine. And to this end we shall quote from any "Standard author" of the "Orthodox school," that we may happen to lay our hands on, John Mason Good, M. D., &c., in his "Book of Nature," London Ed., by J. and J. Harper, N. Y., 1831, in his 2d lecture on the "Nature and Duration of the Soul," when speaking of Solomon, Page 341, says:—"Solomon admitted the doctrine of the resurrection of the body and a state of retribution, while he disbelieved the doctrine of the separate immortality of the soul: and the distinction ought to be constantly kept in view while perusing his writings; since otherwise, they may appear in different places to contradict themselves. Thus, in order to confound the pomp and pageantry of the proud and the powerful, and to show them the vanity and nothingness of life, he (Solomon) adverts to the last of these doctrines (immortality) and confines himself to it. Eccl. 3 : 19, 20. 'That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath (or spirit) so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast, for all is vanity: all go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again.'—But when addressing himself to the young and giddy pursuer of pleasure, in order to alarm him in the midst of his gay and licentious career, he as distinctly alludes and as carefully confines himself to the first of these doctrines, (Resurrection.)—His language then is, ch. 11 : 9, 'Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth,'—and tread as thou wilt the flowery paths of indulgence and pleasure—'but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.' It has been said by some writers, that the judgment here referred to relates to the present world, and must be so interpreted to avoid the self-contradiction just adverted to. But Solomon's wisdom stands in no need of the feeble and rushlight illumination of such commentators!"

There, I think that will do for Solomon. And what does this "Orthodox" witness say of Job? Page 338. "In this sublime and magnificent poem (the book of Job,) the doctrine upon the subject before us is, a patriarchal or traditionary belief of a future state of retributive justice, not by the natural immortality of the soul, but by a resurrection of the body." On the same page he says, "The Hindoo philosophers, (land of Paganism) totally and universally deny a resurrection of the body, and support the doctrine (of future existence,) alone upon the natural immortality of the soul: and the Arabian philosophers (patriarchal) pass over the immortality of the soul, and rest alone upon a resurrection of the body."

Good proceeds to show, p. 334, how this doctrine (immortality) was imported into Greece from India by the Pythagoreans; from Greece it was transported to Rome with the Platonic improvement, but upon the whole, (p. 340,) "philosophy seems to have made but an awkward handle of the question. The whole of the actual knowledge possessed at any time, appears to have been traditionary, (patriarchal) for we may well doubt whether, without such a basis to have built upon, philosophy would have ever started any well grounded opinion in favor of a future state."

The italics and brackets in the foregoing are mine. Notwithstanding the Dr. gives such impartial testimony, still he believed the "Indian doctrine" himself. But Paul says, 2 Tim. 1 : 10, "Christ hath illustrated life and incorruption by the gospel."—(Dr. Adam Clarke's trans.) Again, Paul says, Gal. 3 : 8, "The gospel was preached unto Abraham." Now if we can find out two things: first, what the Gospel is; and second, what it was that was preached to the "Patriarchs!" Well, Clarke (vol. 2, New Test. Com., p. 595,) says: "Jesus Christ died, and lay under the empire of death; he arose again from the dead, and thus has illustrated the doctrine of the resurrection: he took the same human body up into heaven, in the sight of his disciples; and thus has illustrated the doctrine of incorruption. In his death, resurrection and ascension, the doctrine of eternal life, and the resurrection of the human body, and its final incorruptibility, are fully illustrated by example, and established by fact." Paul has here settled the question: that man's immortality comes by a resurrection from the dead, and calls this the gospel. Then the doctrine of the resurrection was what was preached unto Abraham when it was said, "In thee shall all nations be blessed." Now we see also where Solomon, David, and the land of Idumea, Dedan and Teman got their "tradition;" it came by revelation. This also determines which of the "two traditions" was truth; the one came from heaven, the other from the garden—"thou shalt not surely die." The one is handed down by the descendants of "Blessed be Shem," the other by the descendants of "Cursed be Canaan."

Again, Adam Clarke twice emphatically says, pp. 274 and 599, vol. 2, "That without this resurrection there can be no judgment and no future state of rewards and punishments." Pray what good could his immortal soul be to him? No wonder the apostles preached Christ and the resurrection, for they were commanded to preach the "gospel of the kingdom . . . in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come." Luke 24 : 47; Matt. 24 : 14.

Cheer up, Pilgrim!

What! pilgrim, art thou faint and weary in the way to Zion? Is thy burden heavier than thou canst bear? Cast thy burden upon the Lord; he will sustain thee; he will never suffer the righteous to be moved.

Is the stormy wind and tempest abroad, and seest thou no place of shelter? God is thy refuge. Does thy vigor fail thee, and dost thou faint for very feebleness? God is thy strength. Do afflictions and sorrows gird thee round as a garment, and findest thou no friend to aid thee? God is a present help in time of trouble, and they that come unto him he will in no wise cast out.

Pilgrim, be of good cheer; hold thee on thy way. Is the river thou hast to cross deep and forbidding? Listen to the voice of thy Lord; "When thou passeth through the waters I will be with thee, and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee."

Do trials and persecutions beset thee? What readest thou?—"They that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." If the sorrows and cares of the world press thee down, cast them all on God, for he careth for thee. For the Lord is good, his mercy is everlasting, and his truth endureth to all generations; and they that trust in him shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever.

The Lord's Wheat.

We hear men talking about their wheat, his wheat, my wheat, and our wheat, and of various kinds of wheat. But the Psalmist David, in his 15th Psalm, tells us what the Lord's wheat is; let us hear him describe it. He proceeds thus; Lord, who shall abide, (or be garnered) in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? Now hear; "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not." "He that putteth not out his money to usury; (what does this mean? why, it means just what it says;) nor taketh reward against the innocent." Now mark! "He that doeth these things, (above mentioned,) shall never be moved."

The Lord's fan is in his hand; he is soon coming to thoroughly purge his floor, and he declares that he will gather the wheat into his garner; but that he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. We infer, that if no persons are the Lord's true wheat but those described here, that the pile of wheat will be comparatively small; while the heap of chaff will be immense! "Many are called, but few chosen."

Bishop Law "Reproving Presumption."

In a periodical just shown me, though it bears most sacred names, I find a dialogue as to the Bible use of the word "soul" and "surely die." Gen. 2 : 7–19. The editor reports the objector in the dialogue as saying—

"Well, I believe that a dead man is dead, and that the dead know not any thing."

(Answer by the Editor.) "A dead man is certainly dead; but not necessarily unconscious. Adam died in the day he ate the forbidden fruit, and yet he lived centuries after."

Objector. "He did not die in that day. It is in the margin 'dying thou shalt die.' He only began to die that day."

Editor. "If you, sir, know any thing of the significance of that Hebrew expression, you would know that it occurs in the Bible in numerous instances, and it it is invariably rendered thou shalt surely die, and it can mean nothing else. You have been misled by some one who knew nothing of what he affirmed, or else he was not a truthful man; for all who have any knowledge of the subject, know that it will not bear the meaning you attach to it."

Thus the editor discoursed "excathedra," as if his learning and position gave him Episcopal authority—as if his word was law. It is not my purpose to balance the truth and error of this unaccountable language; but to quote the higher and more truthful words of one who was as well informed as he was honored. In the "Theory of Religion," by Edmund Law, D. D., late Lord Bishop of Carlisle, Heb. 2 : 14–15. He says, p. 373,—

"In what sense are we delivered from death by the sufferings of Christ? To determine this, it will be necessary to examine the Scripture sense of the word dehat, and this may be best seen where it is first used in that denunciation which brought Adam and his posterity under it; and where we must suppose it used in all plainness and propriety of speech imaginable. Gen. 2 : 17. And accordingly we find the original here as full and emphatic as words can make it. (Comp. Gen. 37 : 33; Ex. 21 : 19, where the same reduplication of the word signifies entirely, totally, and should have been so rendered here. See this confirmed in Taylor's Scrip. Div., Ch. 9, p. 104, Note.) They are rendered 'thou shalt surely'—but might with more propriety have been rendered, thou shalt UTTERLY DIE! (The Bishop quotes Athanasius, who thinks the doubling the expression denotes (that he, Adam) should not only die, but remain in the corruption of death, as we should all have done had not the second Adam ordained for us a happy resurrection. (Vid. Patrick on Gen. 2 : 17, with Taylor's Scheme of Scrip. Div., p. 104, and more especially, Ibbot's Sermons. Vol. 2, S. 30, p. 182.)

"The words (Gen. 2 : 17,) should be rendered thou shalt utterly die, (see all the authorities named,) which one would think sufficiently explained—in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return. Now what do we imagine they could understand by this denunciation, but a forfeiting of that natural life or CONSCIOUS existence, which their Creator had been lately pleased to confer? The forfeiting which must include a loss of all those benefits that then did or ever could proceed from him. This, and nothing LESS, must be implied in that most solemn sentence."

"Nor can we conceive the unhappy subjects of it to have been at that time so very ingenious, as to explain it away by distinguishing upon the several component parts of their constitution; and concluding that by death no more was meant than only a separation of these same parts, while the principal of them was still living in some different manner, or that it was a continuation of the conscious being, though in some other place! No; this was the philosophy of after ages; concerning which, all I have to say at present is, that one of its most eminent patrons cannot help observing that he does not find it in the Scriptures." He refers to Archbishop Tillotson.

Thus the editor himself (it seems from this) "knows nothing on this subject;" or "is not a truthful man." His words surely turn on himself, and show that he is quite uninformed, or else "he hath spoken presumptuously." Deut. 18 : 22.

Seasonable Kindness.

Real necessity often goads men to the commission of crime, and when the downward course is once taken, and self respect is forfeited, the road to ruin is opened and easily travelled. A kind word, a sympathizing look, and a charitable act will keep from the first offence and save the tempted and despairing one from the fatal fall. The following story was related at a recent meeting of a charitable society:

Some three or four months since, as a merchant of Boston was busily engaged in his counting-room, a youth about eighteen or nineteen years of age walked in and asked, "Will you buy a cake of soap?"

Almost without looking at him the merchant replied, "No, I do not want any."

"Do buy a cake of soap, for I am starving," besought the youth.

The merchant looked at the lad, and, seeing that he had a bright, intelligent countenance, asked him some questions.

The youth said he was born in France, was an entire stranger here, and again begged him to buy some soap. The gentleman was so pleased that he took him to his home, or rather boarding-place, and clothed and supported him for several days. In the meantime, the youth looked around for some employment, and after a while obtained an offer from a manufacturer of perfumery to go about the country and peddle his essences for eight dollars per month. This offer the gentleman advised him to accept. He went into a neighboring State to dispose of his essences, and while there, was arrested because he had no license, and thrown into jail, where he remained several days. "A clergyman of the place—it is not necessary to mention his name"—said the speaker "heard of his case, and went to see him in jail. He was so struck with the learning displayed by the young man, who could speak several languages, that he got him out of the jail and sent him to school." Not long after, the clergyman received a letter from a gentleman in another State, asking him if he did not know a fit person to teach a school in that place. This brought to mind the youth whom he had befriended, and who had displayed such abilities and acquirements, that he immediately gave him a letter of recommendation to the gentleman who had written to him, saying he was competent to teach any school. The young man came to Boston on the way to his school, and going to the merchant who had first extended to him a helping hand, and exhibiting his letter, said to him,—"When I made application to you to buy my soap, and you kindly assisted me and kept me from starving, you saved me from the crime of stealing. Before going to you, I had walked back and forth in front of a store where bread was exposed for sale, debating whether I had better not steal than starve. Your benevolence saved me from stealing, and has been the means of placing me in the way of honorable employment."

The young man went his way, and is now teaching school at the place to which he was invited. Such are the beneficent results which flow from the exercise of charity.—Watchman and Reflector.

Talking in Ecstatics.

It is a very common thing for some young women to indulge in hyperbole.

A pretty dress with them is apt to be "perfectly splendid;" a disagreeable person is too often "perfectly hateful;" a party in which the company enjoyed themselves, somehow becomes transmuted into the "most delightful thing ever seen."

A young man of respectable parts and manly bearing is very often "such a magnificent fellow!" The adjective "perfect," that stands so much alone as never to have the privilege of help from comparatives and superlatives, is sadly overworked, in company with several others of the intense and extravagant order. The result is that by the use of such language as this, your opinion soon becomes valueless.

A woman who deals only in superlatives, demonstrates at once the fact that her judgment is subordinate to her feelings, and that her opinions are entirely unreliable. All language thus loses its power and significance.

The same words are brought into use to describe a ribbon in a milliner's window, as are employed in the endeavor to do justice to Thalberg's execution of Beethoven's most heavenly symphony.

The use of hyperbole is so common among women, that a woman's criticism is generally without value. Let me insist upon this thing. Be more economical in the use of your mother tongue.

Apply your terms of praise with precision; use epithets with some degree of judgment and fitness.

Do not waste your highest and best words upon inferior objects, and find that when you have met with something that really is superlatively great and good, the terms by which you would distinguish it have been thrown away upon inferior things—that you are bankrupt in expression. If a thing is simply good, say so; if pretty, say so; if fine, say so; if sublime, if magnificent, say so; if splendid, say so.

These words all have a different meaning, and you may say them all of different objects, and not use the word "perfect" once. That is a very large word. You will probably be obliged to save it for application to the Deity, or to His works, or to that serene rest which remains for those who love Him.—Titcomb's Letters to Young People.

"Remember"—or the Bullet.

His country was in danger. The spirit of the patriot was stirred. A youth of eighteen had gathered his little all in his knapsack, and was about to bid his mother farewell. With tears she said to him, "will you carry this Bible?" With deep emotion he answered, "Yes."

In all his marches over mountains and valleys, that Bible was never forgotten. In a hard battle, when many fell at his side, this young man escaped alive. After they had taken up the wounded and had buried their dead, he took his knapsack from his shoulders and sat down alone. As he thought of his spared life, he thought of his mother, and of his mother's Bible. He took it out, and on looking at the cover, found it had been perforated with a ball from the enemy. On opening the Bible, the bullet fell out. Then he had a curiosity to know where and at what passage of Scripture the bullet stopped. He turned on and on, until he found it stopped at the words in Eccl. 12 : 1, "Remember now thy Creator, in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." The young soldier fell a weeping. He first thought of his mother, then of his Bible, then of God his Creator and Preserver. He became thenceforward a praying soldier.

When he returned from the war, his country's liberties had been gained. He had found the Savior precious. And oh, what a meeting it was when he met his dear mother, and showed her the Bible that had saved his life in the day of battle! And what was better to her than all the rest, she saw the sweet passage that the bullet could not pass, the passage that had saved his soul: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."—Amer. Messenger.

An Example for Youth.

A little boy in destitute circumstances was put out as an apprentice to a mechanic. For some time he was the youngest apprentice, and of course had to go upon errands for the apprentices, and not unfrequently to procure for them ardent spirits, of which all, except himself, partook, because, as they said, it did them good. He however used none; and, in consequence of it, was often the object of severe ridicule from the older apprentices, because, as they said, he had not sufficient manhood to drink rum. And as they were revelling over their poison, he, under their insults and cruelty, often retired and vented his grief in tears. But now every one of the older apprentices, we are informed, is a drunkard, or in the drunkard's grave; and this youngest apprentice, at whom they used to scoff, is sober and respectable, and worth a hundred thousand dollars. In his employment are about one hundred who do not use ardent spirits; and he is exerting upon many thousands an influence in the highest degree salutary, which may be transmitted by them to future generations, and be the means, through grace, of preparing multitudes not only for usefulness and respectability on earth, but for an exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

☞ Pride destroys all symmetry and grace, and affectation is a more terrible enemy to fine faces than small-pox.

☞ Be just to others. This is the first step toward becoming better than you are yourself.

PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write for the Crisis.

Over all business matters write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to prepay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above: i. e., $1 will pay for twenty three numbers, or $2.25 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

"ON THIS DREARY EARTH."

AIR.—"We are coming, sister Mary."

On this dreary earth I wander, a pilgrim sad and lone,
I am looking for the Savior to come and take me home;
O, the happy day is coming, I long to be away,
And in my contemplation methinks I hear him say;
CHO.—I am coming, lonely pilgrim, I am coming by and by,
Are you ready, lonely pilgrim? for the time is drawing nigh.

Then we'll be up and doing, and in the Lord be strong,
Be waiting, watching, praying, for the time will not be long
When Christ shall come in glory, then we shall with him stay,
And reign with him forever in bright, eternal day.
CHO.—For he's coming, lonely pilgrim, he's coming by and by,
Are you ready, lonely pilgrim? for the time is drawing nigh.

O, what a glorious meeting, when life's trials all are o'er,
O what delightful greeting with our friends on Canaan's shore;
Then we'll pray, and strive, and struggle, till the victory is won,
We'll not lay down our armor till our labor all is done.
CHO.—For he's coming, &c.

We have some loved ones sleeping beneath the cold, cold ground,
But we shall cease our weeping when the last trump shall sound;
For in immortal beauty they'll soon arise and sing
In joyful strains of triumph to our exalted King.
CHO.—For he's coming, &c.

In this dark world of sorrow our hearts are often pained,
But nothing shall disturb us when that bright world we've gained;
No deep heart-riven anguish, no pain or death to fear,
No parting there with dear ones, no silent, farewell tear.
CHO.—O, he's coming, &c.

When we've reached that blissful kingdom, and joined the blood-washed band,
And to all the dear beloved ones extend pure friendship's hand,
We'll wear the crown of glory, and the palm of victory bear,
While music most delightful shall fill the balmy air.
CHO.—For he's coming, &c.

Thoughts on Eccl. 12: 7.

In our first article on Eccl. 12: 7, our inquiry was, whether Solomon, in the language therein employed, taught the doctrine of the soul's immortality without a resurrection. We now proceed to inquire whether Solomon, David, Job, or the patriarchs, taught that doctrine. And to this end we shall quote from any "Standard author" of the "Orthodox school," that we may happen to lay our hands on, John Mason Good, M. D., &c., in his "Book of Nature," London Ed, by J. and J. Harper, N. Y., 1831, in his 2d lecture on the "Nature and Duration of the Soul," when speaking of Solomon, Page 341, says:—"Solomon admitted the doctrine of the resurrection of the body and a state of retribution, while he disbelieved the doctrine of the separate immortality of the soul: and the distinction ought to be constantly kept in view while perusing his writings; since otherwise, they may appear in different places to contradict themselves. Thus, in order to confound the pomp and pageantry of the proud and the powerful, and to show them the vanity and nothingness of life, he (Solomon) adverts to the last of these doctrines (immortality) and confines himself to it. Eccl. 3: 19, 20. 'That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath (or spirit) so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast, for all is vanity: all go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again.'—But when addressing himself to the young and giddy pursuer of pleasure, in order to alarm him in the midst of his gay and licentious career, he as distinctly alludes and as carefully confines himself to the first of these doctrines, (Resurrection.)—His language then is, ch. 11: 9, 'Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth,'—and tread as thou wilt the flowery paths of indulgence and pleasure—'but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.' It has been said by some writers, that the judgment here referred to relates to the present world, and must be so interpreted to avoid the self-contradiction just adverted to. But Solomon's wisdom stands in no need of the feeble and rushlight illumination of such commentators!"

There, I think that will do for Solomon. And what does this "Orthodox" witness say of Job? Page 336. "In this sublime and magnificent poem (the book of Job,) the doctrine upon the subject before us is, a patriarchal or traditionary belief of a future state of retributive justice, not by the natural immortality of the soul, but by a resurrection of the body." On the same page he says, "The Hindoo philosophers, (land of Paganism) totally and universally deny a resurrection of the body, and support the doctrine (of future existence,) alone upon the natural immortality of the soul: and the Arabian philosophers (patriarchal) pass over the immortality of the soul, and rest alone upon a resurrection of the body."

Good proceeds to show, p. 334, how this doctrine (immortality) was imported into Greece from India by the Pythagoreans; from Greece it was transported to Rome with the Platonic improvement, but upon the whole, (p. 340) "philosophy seems to have made but an awkward handle of the question. The whole of the actual knowledge possessed at any time, appears to have been traditionary, (patriarchal) for we may well doubt whether, without such a basis to have built upon, philosophy would have ever started any well grounded opinion in favor of a future state."

The italics and brackets in the foregoing are mine. Notwithstanding the Dr. gives such impartial testimony, still he believed the "Indian doctrine" himself. But Paul says, 2 Tim. 1: 10, "Christ hath illustrated life and incorruption by the gospel."—(Dr. Adam Clarke's trans.) Again, Paul says, Gal. 3: 8, "The gospel was preached unto Abraham." Now if we can find out two things: first, what the Gospel is; and second, what it was that was preached to the "Patriarchs!" Well, Clarke (vol. 2, New Test. Com., p. 595,) says: "Jesus Christ died, and lay under the empire of death; he arose again from the dead, and thus has illustrated the doctrine of the resurrection: he took the same human body up into heaven, in the sight of his disciples; and thus has illustrated the doctrine of incorruption. In his death, resurrection and ascension, the doctrine of eternal life, and the resurrection of the human body, and its final incorruptibility, are fully illustrated by example, and established by fact." Paul has here settled the question: that man's immortality comes by a resurrection from the dead, and calls this the gospel. Then the doctrine of the resurrection was what was preached unto Abraham when it was said, "In thee shall all nations be blessed." Now we see also where Solomon, David, and the land of Idumea, Dedan and Teman got their "tradition;" it came by revelation. This also determines which of the "two traditions" was truth; the one came from heaven, the other from the garden—"thou shalt not surely die." The one is handed down by the descendants of "Blessed be Shem," the other by the descendants of "Cursed be Canaan."

Again, Adam Clarke twice emphatically says, pp. 274 and 599, vol. 2, "That without this resurrection there can be no judgment and no future state of rewards and punishments." Pray what good could his immortal soul be to him? No wonder the apostles preached Christ and the resurrection, for they were commanded to preach the "gospel of the kingdom . . . in all the world for a witness unto all nations and then shall the end come." Luke 24: 47; Matt. 24: 14.

For the Crisis.

Cheer up, Pilgrim!

What! pilgrim, art thou faint and weary in the way to Zion? Is thy burden heavier than thou canst bear? Cast thy burden upon the Lord; he will sustain thee; he will never suffer the righteous to be moved.

Is the stormy wind and tempest abroad, and seest thou no place of shelter? God is thy refuge. Does thy vigor fail thee, and dost thou faint for very feebleness? God is thy strength. Do afflictions and sorrows gird thee round as a garment, and findest thou no friend to aid thee? God is a present help in time of trouble, and they that come unto him he will in no wise cast out.

Pilgrim, be of good cheer; hold thee on thy way. Is the river thou hast to cross deep and forbidding? Listen to the voice of thy Lord; "When thou passeth through the waters I will be with thee, and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee."

Do trials and persecutions beset thee? What readest thou?—"They that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." If the sorrows and cares of the world press thee down, cast them all on God, for he careth for thee. For the Lord is good, his mercy is everlasting, and his truth endureth to all generations; and they that trust in him shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever.

The Lord's Wheat.

We hear men talking about their wheat, his wheat, my wheat, and our wheat, and of various kinds of wheat. But the Psalmist David, in his 15th Psalm, tells us what the Lord's wheat is; let us hear him describe it. He proceeds thus; Lord, who shall abide, (or be garnered) in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? Now hear; "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart. He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbor. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but honoreth them that fear the Lord. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not." "He that putteth not out his money to usury; (what does this mean? why, it means just what it says;) nor taketh reward against the innocent." Now mark! "He that doeth these things, (above mentioned,) shall never be moved."

The Lord's fan is in his hand; he is soon coming to thoroughly purge his floor, and he declares that he will gather the wheat into his garner; but that he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. We infer, that if no persons are the Lord's true wheat but those described here, that the pile of wheat will be comparatively small; while the heap of chaff will be immense! "Many are called, but few chosen."

For the Crisis.

Bishop Law "Reproving Presumption."

In a periodical just shown me, though it bears most sacred names, I find a dialogue as to the Bible use of the word "soul" and "surely die." Gen. 2: 7–19. The editor reports the objector in the dialogue as saying—

"Well, I believe that a dead man is dead, and that the dead know not any thing."

(Answer by the Editor.) "A dead man is certainly dead; but not necessarily unconscious. Adam died in the day he ate the forbidden fruit, and yet he lived centuries after."

Objector. "He did not die in that day. It is in the margin 'dying thou shalt die.' He only began to die that day."

Editor. "If you, sir, know any thing of the significance of that Hebrew expression, you would know that it occurs in the Bible in numerous instances, and it it is invariably rendered thou shalt surely die, and it can mean nothing else. You have been misled by some one who knew nothing of what he affirmed, or else he was not a truthful man; for all who have any knowledge of the subject, know that it will not bear the meaning you attach to it."

Thus the editor discoursed "excathedra," as if his learning and position gave him Episcopal authority—as if his word was law. It is not my purpose to balance the truth and error of this unaccountable language; but to quote the higher and more truthful words of one who was as well informed as he was honored. In the "Theory of Religion," by Edmund Law, D. D., late Lord Bishop of Carlisle, Heb. 2: 14–15. He says, p. 373,—

"In what sense are we delivered from death by the sufferings of Christ? To determine this, it will be necessary to examine the Scripture sense of the word dehat, and this may be best seen where it is first used in that denunciation which brought Adam and his posterity under it; and where we must suppose it used in all plainness and propriety of speech imaginable. Gen. 2: 17. And accordingly we find the original here as full and emphatic as words can make it. (Comp. Gen. 37: 33; Ex. 21: 19, where the same reduplication of the word signifies entirely, totally, and should have been so rendered here. See this confirmed in Taylor's Scrip. Div., Ch. 9, p. 104, Note.) They are rendered 'thou shalt surely'—but might with more propriety have been rendered, thou shalt UTTERLY DIE! (The Bishop quotes Athanasius, who thinks the doubling the expression denotes (that he, Adam) should not only die, but remain in the corruption of death, as we should all have done had not the second Adam ordained for us a happy resurrection. (Vid. Patrick on Gen. 2: 17, with Taylor's Scheme of Scrip. Div., p. 104, and more especially, Ibbot's Sermons. Vol. 2, S. 30, p. 182.)

"The words (Gen. 2: 17,) should be rendered thou shalt utterly die, (see all the authorities named,) which one would think sufficiently explained—in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return. Now what do we imagine they could understand by this denunciation, but a forfeiting of that natural life or CONSCIOUS existence, which their Creator had been lately pleased to confer? The forfeiting which must include a loss of all those benefits that then did or ever could proceed from him. This, and nothing LESS, must be implied in that most solemn sentence."

"Nor can we conceive the unhappy subjects of it to have been at that time so very ingenious, as to explain it away by distinguishing upon the several component parts of their constitution; and concluding that by death no more was meant than only a separation of these same parts, while the principal of them was still living in some different manner, or that it was a continuation of the conscious being, though in some other place! No; this was the philosophy of after ages; concerning which, all I have to say at present is, that one of its most eminent patrons cannot help observing that he does not find it in the Scriptures." He refers to Archbishop Tillotson.

Thus the editor himself (it seems from this) "knows nothing on this subject;" or "is not a truthful man." His words surely turn on himself, and show that he is quite uninformed, or else "he hath spoken presumptuously." Deut. 18: 22.

Seasonable Kindness.

Real necessity often goads man to the commission of crime, and when the downward course is once taken, and self respect is forfeited, the road to ruin is opened and easily travelled. A kind word, a sympathizing look, and a charitable act will keep from the first offence and save the tempted and despairing one from the fatal fall. The following story was related at a recent meeting of a charitable society:

Some three or four months since, as a merchant of Boston was busily engaged in his counting-room, a youth about eighteen or nineteen years of age walked in and asked, "Will you buy a cake of soap?"

Almost without looking at him the merchant replied, "No, I do not want any."

"Do buy a cake of soap, for I am starving," besought the youth.

The merchant looked at the lad, and, seeing that he had a bright, intelligent countenance, asked him some questions.

The youth said he was born in France, was an entire stranger here, and again begged him to buy some soap. The gentleman was so pleased that he took him to his home, or rather boarding-place, and clothed and supported him for several days. In the meantime, the youth looked around for some employment, and after a while obtained an offer from a manufacturer of perfumery to go about the country and peddle his essences for eight dollars per month. This offer the gentleman advised him to accept. He went into a neighboring State to dispose of his essences, and while there was arrested because he had no license, and thrown into jail, where he remained several days. "A clergyman of the place—it is not necessary to mention his name"—said the speaker "heard of his case, and went to see him in jail. He was so struck with the learning displayed by the young man, who could speak several languages, that he got him out of the jail and sent him to school." Not long after, the clergyman received a letter from a gentleman in another State, asking him if he did not know a fit person to teach a school in that place. This brought to mind the youth whom he had befriended, and who had displayed such abilities and acquirements, that he immediately gave him a letter of recommendation to the gentleman who had written to him, saying he was competent to teach any school. The young man came to Boston on the way to his school, and going to the merchant who had first extended to him a helping hand, and exhibiting his letter, said to him,—"When I made application to you to buy my soap, and you kindly assisted me and kept me from starving, you saved me from the crime of stealing. Before going to you, I had walked back and forth in front of a store where bread was exposed for sale, debating whether I had better not steal than starve. Your benevolence saved me from stealing, and has been the means of placing me in the way of honorable employment."

The young man went his way, and is now teaching school at the place to which he was invited. Such are the beneficent results which flow from the exercise of charity.—Watchman and Reflector.

Talking in Ecstatics.

It is a very common thing for some young women to indulge in hyperbole.

A pretty dress with them is apt to be "perfectly splendid;" a disagreeable person is too often "perfectly hateful;" a party in which the company enjoyed themselves, somehow becomes transmuted into the "most delightful thing ever seen."

A young man of respectable parts and manly bearing is, very often "such a magnificent fellow!" The adjective "perfect," that stands so much alone as never to have the privilege of help from comparatives and superlatives, is sadly overworked, in company with several others of the intense and extravagant order. The result is that by the use of such language as this, your opinion soon becomes valueless.

A woman who deals only in superlatives, demonstrates at once the fact that her judgment is subordinate to her feelings, and that her opinions are entirely unreliable. All language thus loses its power and significance.

The same words are brought into use to describe a ribbon in a milliner's window, as are employed in the endeavor to do justice to Thalberg's execution of Beethoven's most heavenly symphony.

The use of hyperbole is so common among women, that a woman's criticism is generally without value. Let me insist upon this thing. Be more economical in the use of your mother tongue.

Apply your terms of praise with precision; use epithets with some degree of judgment and fitness.

Do not waste your highest and best words upon inferior objects, and find that when you have met with something that really is superlatively great and good, the terms by which you would distinguish it have been thrown away upon inferior things—that you are bankrupt in expression. If a thing is simply good, say so; if pretty, say so; if fine, say so; if sublime, if magnificent, say so; if splendid, say so.

These words all have a different meaning, and you may say them all of different objects, and not use the word "perfect" once. That is a very large word. You will probably be obliged to save it for application to the Deity, or to His works, or to that serene rest which remains for those who love Him.—Titcomb's Letters to Young People.

"Remember"—or the Bullet.

His country was in danger. The spirit of the patriot was stirred. A youth of eighteen had gathered his little all in his knapsack, and was about to bid his mother farewell. With tears she said to him: "will you carry this Bible?" With deep emotion he answered, "Yes."

In all his marches over mountains and valleys, that Bible was never forgotten. In a hard battle, when many fell at his side, this young man escaped alive. After they had taken up the wounded and had buried their dead, he took his knapsack from his shoulders and sat down alone. As he thought of his spared life, he thought of his mother, and of his mother's Bible. He took it out, and on looking at the cover, found it had been perforated with a ball from the enemy. On opening the Bible, the bullet fell out. Then he had a curiosity to know where and at what passage of Scripture the bullet stopped. He turned on and on, until he found it stopped at the words in Eccl. 12: 1, "Remember now thy Creator, in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." The young soldier fell a weeping. He first thought of his mother, then of his Bible, then of God his Creator and Preserver. He became thenceforward a praying soldier.

When he returned from the war, his country's liberties had been gained. He had found the Savior precious. And oh, what a meeting it was when he met his dear mother, and showed her the Bible that had saved his life in the day of battle! And what was better to her than all the rest, she saw the sweet passage that the bullet could not pass, the passage that had saved his soul: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."—Amer. Messenger.

An Example for Youth.

A little boy in destitute circumstances was put out as an apprentice to a mechanic. For some time he was the youngest apprentice, and of course had to go upon errands for the apprentices, and not unfrequently to procure for them ardent spirits, of which all, except himself, partook, because, as they said, it did them good. He however used none; and, in consequence of it, was often the object of severe ridicule from the older apprentices, because, as they said, he had not sufficient manhood to drink rum. And as they were revelling over their poison, he, under their insults and cruelty, often retired and vented his grief in tears. But now every one of the older apprentices, we are informed, is a drunkard, or in the drunkard's grave; and this youngest apprentice, at whom they used to scoff, is sober and respectable, and worth a hundred thousand dollars. In his employment are about one hundred who do not use ardent spirits; and he is exerting upon many thousands an influence in the highest degree salutary, which may be transmitted by them to future generations, and be the means, through grace, of preparing multitudes not only for usefulness and respectability on earth, but for an exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

A POETICAL LETTER.

[illegible]

A sower went forth sowing and bearing precious seed,
[illegible] weeping and [illegible], desiring all to heed;
Some fell along the wayside, exposed to birds of air,
And which they soon devoured, as their own lawful share.
Some falling upon stones, not having there much earth,
Forthwith it did spring up, ('twas premature in birth,)
[illegible] scorching heat of [illegible]
Not having taken root, it soon withered away.
And some among the thorns, in the midst of wealth and cares,
Were like [illegible];
O! what a solemn thought they did not count the cost!
Such in the judgment day most surely will be lost.
But some on good ground fell, [illegible] for the truth were bold;
They loved the truth so well they bore an hundred fold;
They laid a good foundation, they built upon the rock,
And when the wind blew hardest they could withstand the shock.
In the history of their times, as the day was getting late,
When the laborers were few, and the harvest very great,
The drunkards of Ephraim were slumbering around,
An aged man came blowing a trump of certain sound.
It roused the host of sleepers, it caused them to arise,
It broke their night of dreaming, it took them by surprise;
It set them all to searching the Bible o'er and o'er,
And still the blast grew louder;—it rung from shore to shore.
A noble band of brethren around him soon did stand,
From out of every compact, united heart and hand;
But soon that band of union by Satan's means were riven,
And many of that brotherhood to worldly strife were driven.
Some mounted on a hobby horse, and such would ride away;
Then some would follow after them to learn what they would say;
Then Jehu-like they'd drive it, until poor hobby died,—
Would then disparage others because they did not ride.
Thus, while onward [illegible] fast to the Judgment day,
[illegible]
[illegible] would drive along their [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] read my doggerel letter,
I hope both him and me may strive to grow much better;
That [illegible] shall shout about the harvest home,
Then bearing precious sheaves, to glory we may come.

From Bro. J. P. Babcock.

Bro. Grant:—It is with earnestness and prayer, with a desire to glory in our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, that I pen these few lines. There are many of the brethren that would like to know how we are getting along at Riverpoint.

Last Sabbath, (Nov. 7th,) was a day of joy, and the evening an evening of solemnity to many. Bro. E. Bellows preached an able discourse on the personality of Christ, taking up prophecy and the witnesses of the Apostles, &c., &c. At noon Bro. Bellows buried three in baptism. In the afternoon Bro. Joseph D. Brown, of Providence, preached a searching discourse on the duties of the ministers and the church. After Bro. Brown got through preaching, Bro. Benj. Roberts was ordained, and set apart for the ministry. Elds. E. Bellows, Joseph D. Brown and Reynolds were present. In the evening Bro. E. Bellows preached a short discourse, which was followed by a love feast. We came around the table. What a solemn sight to the christian! But our Elder Brother was absent, who poured out his blood for us. And we eat his body and drink his blood in remembrance of him, till he shall come again with eternal life.

My prayer is that we may do His will, and sit down with him at his table in his kingdom.

The Kingdom of Heaven.

"The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." Matt. 11: 12.

So various are the allusions in the New Testament to the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of God, and the kingdom of Christ, many are at a loss to know how these representations are to be understood, and whether they refer to one and the same kingdom or not.

The kingdom of heaven is not unfrequently placed in opposition to the kingdoms of this world, and the children of the kingdom are represented as earnestly contending, and striving, to gain possession of their blood-bought inheritance. This world in which we live, and through which we are journeying, is not our home; it is polluted by sin and unbelief; and to rest in, or be satisfied with, things present, will deprive us of the promise of the world to come—the kingdom of heaven. Here, then, is the conflict, the struggle, the violent effort, and earnest force necessary to gain the victory over the world, the flesh, and the devil, before we can win a crown of immortality in the kingdom of God. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." "Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many shall seek to enter in and shall not be able." "Fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life." These, and many other like passages of Scripture, plainly teach us that without an earnest and constant effort, we shall certainly fail of the promised blessing; that we need the whole armor of God, and constant vigilance to insure a final triumph over all the powers of darkness. "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against spiritual wickedness in high places." And "who is sufficient for these things?"

By all this, it appears that without an effort, without a struggle, without a sacrifice, we can never gain the kingdom of heaven. Those who are not willing to buy this pearl of great price, at whatever cost, will assuredly never possess it. If we are ashamed of Christ, of his word, and his truth, and hide our one talent in a napkin, or bury it in the earth, because it happens to be unpopular, and may expose us to contempt and persecution from the world, or the church, what can we expect but that Christ will be ashamed of such dishonest and slothful servants, when he comes to reward every man according to his works? If light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light, and hide their light under a bushel, how dwelleth the love of God in them?

Some who read this may understand what I mean in these remarks; but lest they should be dull of apprehension, I will be more explicit. For some years past, the attention of the christian church has been called to a re-examination of the subject of the natural immortality of the soul, and the state of the dead, prior to the resurrection. Almost every one who takes any interest in the moving events of the day, has more or less examined these subjects, and come to some sort of decision upon them in his own mind. With those who conscientiously believe in the immortality of all men, and the conscious state of the dead, after due examination of the scriptural argument, I have nothing to do; to their own master they must stand or fall. It is with those who have been partially convinced that the orthodox view of these subjects is not in accordance with God's word, and yet refuse to let the light that God has given them shine before men, for fear of reproach or persecution, or the loss of popularity. With such, and I know there are not a few who are in this case, I wish to say a few words in all christian love and fidelity.

Brethren, God has graciously opened your eyes to see wondrous things in his law; he has in some degree removed your prejudices against the truth, and thus cleared the way for an abundant entrance into his kingdom to come. He has given you a view of the beauty and glory of his character, as a God of infinite love, who will not keep his anger forever, because he delighteth in mercy. He has removed from your mind a load of uncertainty, doubt and distrust, in the dealings of God with the wicked in a future world. He has shown you that sin, sorrow, and all evil, will not be eternal; that the wickedness of the wicked shall come to an end, in their final destruction. It has given you a hope full of immortality, through faith in Christ, the author and giver of life; who has promised to raise his people up at the last day, and give them a name and place in his kingdom. Now what have you rendered to the Lord for all this? How have you requited him for all his goodness and mercy to you, in thus opening your eyes to see and know the truth? You have been ashamed to acknowledge him before the world. The fear of man has shut up your mouth, and made you dumb, when called upon to confess Christ before men. The love of popularity in the church, has made you a base and cringing hypocrite; professing what you do not believe, and hearing those you know to be earnest seekers after truth, reviled and accused of infidelity and heresy, &c., and you, like a pitiful coward sit still, and make no sign, even of disapproval, to such false accusations. Get you up in a snug corner, where you can be neither seen nor heard, you will confess, that "we have the scripture argument, and the truth on our side," but oh! don't mention it on any account; wait a little, the time is not yet come. Yet, when the truth becomes popular, when you can lose nothing by confessing it; when you can obtain the praise of man, and escape all danger and reproach, then you will be valiant for the truth; then you will say, come and see my zeal for the Lord!

And do you really think Christ will receive such service as this? Is this the way you follow him through evil, as well as good report? Oh, remember what he has declared to you, and to all who thus shun the cross: "Him who is ashamed of me, and of my words, before this wicked and adulterous generation, of him will the Son of man be ashamed, before his Father, and the holy angels." "Occupy till I come." Be valiant for the truth upon the earth.

But you may say, by way of excuse, these things are of minor importance, the belief in them is not necessary to salvation. Be it so; this is not the question; to others who have not enjoyed the light and knowledge you possess, they are not accountable for what they have not, but for the use, or abuse of what they have. "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." How do you know but this is the very touch-stone and trial of your faith and love to Christ? Your hope of life and immortality may, under God, depend upon your faithfulness and obedience to Christ and his truth. Do not imagine that the mere silent belief in the personal reign of Christ, the final destruction of the wicked, or the sleep of the dead till the resurrection, can be of any avail to you, or any one, without a practical use of these glorious doctrines of the gospel. A mere speculative faith will save no one; the devils believe, and tremble; you may believe, and perish. If your faith is dead, and produces no fruit, Christ will say to you, as he did to the barren fig-tree, "cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground?"

Remember, then, that the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. The world, the flesh, and the devil, oppose your entrance; they will lay every impediment in your way; and if the fear of man, the love of the world, or the indulgence of ease and popularity, will prove a sufficient temptation to keep you out of the kingdom, all I have to say is, the devil has had an easy job of it, and may keep his fiery darts for more noble game.

Letters Illustrative of Christian Experience.—No. 4.

My Dear Sister:—I will cite your attention to one or two more illustrations of the way of faith, that have come under my own observation, for I have often derived great benefit from learning just how others have been enabled to believe. The first one to which I will cite you, bore from the commencement the impress of the Divine signet. I will relate the entire circumstance, as it illustrates another truth connected with christian experience, viz., Divine guidance.

Several years ago, I attended a camp-meeting in W——. The last night of the meeting I entered a tent where a prayer meeting was in progress. Several were gathered in a circle as subjects of prayer. I felt much burdened in mind after entering the tent, and such an uneasiness of spirit took hold upon me, that, in order to obtain relief, I left the tent. I became immediately calm, and a "still small voice" internally said, "Go to U. tent." I was a stranger to its inmates, and hesitated. I met a friend, and invited her to go with me to the U. tent. She declined, and after wandering about a little, I reasoned thus, as I heard the voice of prayer and praise from the tent I had left: "I will go back and unite in the exercises of that meeting, and not indulge in those feelings that led me away, for they were doubtless the influence of temptation." With this resolve, I re-entered the tent. God's Spirit was evidently moving in the assembly, but I felt it not, or rather, I did not partake of its influence in the manner it was there operating. I again felt that burden roll upon my soul, and such a spirit of uneasiness again possessed me, that, finding I could not there find rest, I arose and left the tent. All was now calm within—perfect stillness reigned in my heart, and once more came that inward voice, saying, 'Go to U. tent." It seemed passing strange to me why I should feel thus impressed to go to a tent where I was wholly unacquainted, but now I obeyed the impulse. As I passed within the door, the glory of God so came down upon me and filled my soul, that I gave utterance to the feeling by saying aloud, "Glory to God!" I felt that power was given unto me; I was "filled with the Holy Ghost," and for what purpose will soon be evident.

A class meeting was in progress. Soon after I had entered the tent, the leader addressed a young lady seated in the remotest corner of the tent. She was a penitent sinner, and requested prayers. The leader remarked, "We will offer prayer on your behalf." Once more that voice whispered, "Go kneel by her side, and teach her the way of faith." With difficulty I made my way to her, (for the tent was filled) and kneeled by her. My first inquiry was, "Are you willing to give yourself and your all to Christ?" "I am," was her prompt reply. Are you willing now to make the entire surrender of yourself to him?" "Yes, I am," said she decidedly. "Will you do it now?" "Yes." I requested her to say aloud, "O Lord, I give myself to thee, I will now be thine." She did so very heartily. She was in earnest about it. I repeated to her some of the precious promises indicating that just at that point Christ had promised to accept and save her, closing with the language of the Apostle,—"Ye are servants to whomsoever ye yield yourselves servants to obey," and then added, "now you have consecrated yourself unto the Lord; you have yielded yourself to be his servant, to obey him henceforth; now he commands you to believe on him, and it is your duty now to reckon yourself the Lord's; say, "I am thine, Lord." Here, for the first time, nature began to shrink. "I want to feel that I am the Lord's before I say so," was her reply. That was perfectly natural, was it not? But no, she must now begin a life of faith, and, as I told her, that would bring the feeling assurance that she was the Lord's. First, her faith must rest upon the promise—"I will receive you," and then, after faith had appropriated it, the witness would follow. She took encouragement, and said, "I am thine, Lord," "I am thine, Lord," several times; but the coveted feeling not being realized, she cried out, "Lord, let me feel that I am thine!" Once more I encouraged her to simply rest on the word of promise, and again with trembling she repeats the words, "I am thine, Lord," but soon she prays, "Lord, let me feel that I am thine." Words of encouragement brought her back again, and she repeats the precious words, "I am thine, Lord," until her faith waxed so strong that she bore it upward to the throne, and when she laid it upon the altar, she was saved: but still the voice had not so spoken to her heart, imparting the joy of assurance. One more test of her faith, and the victory was won. I led her on differently from what I had ever done before with any individual, but I did but follow the promptings of the Invisible Teacher.

"Now, sister, say, 'Praise the Lord, I am his.'" "But I want to feel to praise him," said she, thus reverting back to her former difficulty. But God will have her detached from this. "Are you the Lord's?" "Yes," was her reply. "Ought you not to praise him that you are his—praise him for receiving you?" "Yes, but I want to feel to praise." "Come now, my sister, think no longer of your feelings, but praise the Lord for his goodness in receiving you. Say, 'Praise the Lord, I am his.' She did so for a moment, and then cried out, "Lord, let me feel to praise thee." "Feeling or no feeling, praise the Lord," said I. She began again, and soon her voice increased to a higher tone—the Spirit began to inspire praise—higher and higher still rose the voice of praise, and now with the "know so" in her heart, she could with feeling say, "Praise the Lord, I am his!" An individual upon my right seized my hand; she was in much distress of mind, and, while I was endeavoring to lead her to the point of entire consecration, she would ever and anon cry out, "Anything but that, Lord! Anything but that, Lord!" I labored long to induce her to yield the cherished object, but apparently in vain, and sought to tear myself away, when all at once she exclaimed, "Any way, Lord, only bless!" and the power of God fell upon her, and weak and helpless she sank upon the ground. She had, like Naaman, marked out the way by which she desired to be blest; she wanted the "still small voice," and not until she yielded, and said, "Any way, Lord, only bless!" was her soul blessed. Another soul engaged my attention in that corner of the tent, and not until she too was delivered, did I come to a consciousness of what was passing around me.

The exercises of the meeting had closed, but how many had prayed I knew not, and when they ceased I knew not. I had done the work God sent me there to perform; victory had been in that retired corner; and when I arose and looked around, not only my own soul, but the tent also, seemed filled with the Divine glory. My letter is long, and I will close by saying, "Feeling or no feeling, believe, and say with the sister, "Any way, Lord, only bless!" Yours in love,

Power of Temptation.—I know from experience that habit can, in direct opposition to every conviction of the mind, and but little aided by the elements of temptation, induce a repetition of the most unworthy actions. The mind is weak where it has once given way. It is long before a principle restored can become as firm as one that has never been moved. It is as in the case of a mound of a reservoir: if this mound has in one place been broken, whatever care has been taken to make the repaired part as strong as possible, the probability is that if it give way again, it will be in that place.—Foster.

"A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways."—Ja. 1: 8.

Mark the language! "All his ways." Are these words true? Who will deny them? And how [illegible], in this age of doubt, and infidelity, and strife and division, for the christian [illegible] to be well settled in the faith—well grounded in the truth. We are told that in this "age of progress," as "new truths are developed," if men would "keep up with the times," they must leave behind the principles that governed them yesterday, no matter how well suited they were to their condition, and take up the new dogma of to-day. No deep inquiry is made into the truth of these proposed dogmas; but their adaptation to satisfy the desires of the natural heart, their novelty and their popularity are the points to be decided upon. And thus men unfurl their banners and shout "progress!" So it is progress; such terrible progress as the ship makes in the maelstrom—swifter and swifter, until it reaches the vortex of destruction. Amid all this tumult, what is the christian's duty? What it ever has been and ever will be—to take a position on the truth, and maintain it, in spite of the world, the flesh, and the Devil. God's word is truth. All other words are false. A truth cannot be found in the world, whether new or old, but God is its author. And now, if it is so necessary to take a position, and a true one, the question arises, "Have we got the truth?"

If any one who has enlisted in the ranks of the second Advent belief is inclined at all to be doubtful, I would say, satisfy yourselves as quickly as possible. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." 1 Thess. 5: 21. Be certain you have the truth, for, be assured, all else will fail in the day of trial. Having searched and satisfied ourselves, what next? Why, take a fixed position on it, and prepare for battle. Take the whole armor of God, and wear it continually, and use it whenever occasion calls for it. But, above all things, don't distrust the ground you have chosen to stand upon. If our doctrines were truth once, they are truth now, and will remain so forever. Don't leave your position for another, because you think you can be more effectual there. Don't join as allies with every company you may see, because "Truth" is inscribed on their banner, and they invite you to join. Don't think God is with them more than with you. God is with genuine truth, and not with an article having merely an inscription without the reality. Don't, my Bro. Advent preacher, when you know there is error, and mainly error, in other professed creeds,—don't join them in a strife to overcome Satan. As well might the farmer try to kill thistles by sowing cockle. For the love you bear the truth—for the joy you have in the downfall of error—for the hope you have of final victory—don't, I beseech of you, leave the pure for the impure—the literal for the spiritual—the wheat for the chaff. A POETICAL LETTER.

[illegible]

A sower went forth sowing and bearing precious seed,
[illegible] all to heed;
Some fell along the wayside, exposed to birds of air,
And which they soon devoured, as their own lawful share.
Some falling upon stones, not having there much earth,
Forthwith it did spring up, ('Twas premature in birth,)
And when the sun [illegible] scorching heat of day,
Not having taken root, it soon withered away.
And some among the thorns, in the midst of wealth and care,
Were like [illegible];
O! what a solemn thought, they did not count the cost!
Such in the judgment day most surely will be lost.
But some [illegible] fell, and for the truth were bold;
They loved the truth so well they bore an hundred fold,
They laid a good foundation, they built upon the rock,
And when the wind blew hardest they could withstand the shock.
In the history of their times, as the day was getting late,
When the laborers were few, and the harvest very great,
The drunkards of Ephraim were slumbering around,
An aged man came blowing a trump of certain sound.
It roused the host of sleepers, it caused them to arise,
It broke their night of dreaming, it took them by surprise;
It set them all to searching the Bible o'er and o'er,
And still the blast grew louder;—it rung from shore to shore.
A noble band of brethren around him soon did stand,
From out of every compact, united heart and hand;
But soon that band of union by Satan's means were riven,
And many of that brotherhood to worldly strife were driven.
Some mounted on a hobby horse, and such would ride away;
Then some would follow after them to learn what they would say;
Then Jehu-like they'd drive it, until poor hobby died,—
Would then disparage others because they did not ride.
Thus, while onward [illegible] to the Judgment day,
[illegible]
Until a hobby horseman would drive along their way.
[illegible] what he did say.
If any hobby horseman should read my doggerel letter,
I hope both him and me may strive to grow much better;
That when the [illegible] shall shout the harvest home,
Then bearing precious sheaves, to glory we may come.

From Bro. J. P. Babcock.

Bro. Grant:—It is with earnestness and prayer, with a desire to glory in our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, that I pen these few lines. There are many of the brethren that would like to know how we are getting along at Riverpoint.

Last Sabbath, (Nov. 7th,) was a day of joy, and the evening an evening of solemnity to many. Bro. E. Bellows preached an able discourse on the personality of Christ, taking up prophecy and the witnesses of the Apostles, &c., &c. At noon Bro. Bellows buried three in baptism. In the afternoon Bro. Joseph D. Brown, of Providence, preached a searching discourse on the duties of the ministers and the church. After Bro. Brown got through preaching, Bro. Benj. Roberts was ordained, and set apart for the ministry. Elds. E. Bellows, Joseph D. Brown and Reynolds were present. In the evening Bro. E. Bellows preached a short discourse, which was followed by a love feast. We came around the table. What a solemn sight to the christian! But our Elder Brother was absent, who poured out his blood for us. And we eat his body and drink his blood in remembrance of him, till he shall come again with eternal life.

My prayer is that we may do His will, and sit down with him at his table in his kingdom. John P. Babcock.

The Kingdom of Heaven.

"The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." Matt. 11: 12.

So various are the allusions in the New Testament to the kingdom of heaven, the kingdom of God, and the kingdom of Christ, many are at a loss to know how these representations are to be understood, and whether they refer to one and the same kingdom or not.

The kingdom of heaven is not unfrequently placed in opposition to the kingdoms of this world, and the children of the kingdom are represented as earnestly contending, and striving, to gain possession of their blood-bought inheritance. This world in which we live, and through which we are journeying, is not our home; it is polluted by sin and unbelief; and to rest in, or be satisfied with, things present, will deprive us of the promise of the world to come—the kingdom of heaven. Here, then, is the conflict, the struggle, the violent effort, and earnest force necessary to gain the victory over the world, the flesh, and the devil, before we can win a crown of immortality in the kingdom of God. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." "Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many shall seek to enter in and shall not be able." "Fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life." These, and many other like passages of Scripture, plainly teach us that without an earnest and constant effort, we shall certainly fail of the promised blessing; that we need the whole armor of God, and constant vigilance to insure a final triumph over all the powers of darkness. "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against spiritual wickedness in high places." And "who is sufficient for these things?"

By all this, it appears that without an effort, without a struggle, without a sacrifice, we can never gain the kingdom of heaven. Those who are not willing to buy this pearl of great price, at whatever cost, will assuredly never possess it. If we are ashamed of Christ, of his word, and his truth, and hide our one talent in a napkin, or bury it in the earth, because it happens to be unpopular, and may expose us to contempt and persecution from the world, or the church, what can we expect but that Christ will be ashamed of such dishonest and slothful servants, when he comes to reward every man according to his works? If light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light, and hide their light under a bushel, how dwelleth the love of God in them?

Some who read this may understand what I mean in these remarks; but lest they should be dull of apprehension, I will be more explicit. For some years past, the attention of the christian church has been called to a re-examination of the subject of the natural immortality of the soul, and the state of the dead, prior to the resurrection. Almost every one who takes any interest in the moving events of the day, has more or less examined these subjects, and come to some sort of decision upon them in his own mind. With those who conscientiously believe in the immortality of all men, and the conscious state of the dead, after due examination of the scriptural argument, I have nothing to do; to their own master they must stand or fall. It is with those who have been partially convinced that the orthodox view of these subjects is not in accordance with God's word, and yet refuse to let the light that God has given them shine before men, for fear of reproach or persecution, or the loss of popularity. With such, and I know there are not a few who are in this case, I wish to say a few words in all christian love and fidelity.

Brethren, God has graciously opened your eyes to see wondrous things in his law; he has in some degree removed your prejudices against the truth, and thus cleared the way for an abundant entrance into his kingdom to come. He has given you a view of the beauty and glory of his character, as a God of infinite love, who will not keep his anger forever, because he delighteth in mercy. He has removed from your mind a load of uncertainty, doubt and distrust, in the dealings of God with the wicked in a future world. He has shown you that sin, sorrow, and all evil, will not be eternal; that the wickedness of the wicked shall come to an end, in their final destruction. It has given you a hope full of immortality, through faith in Christ, the author and giver of life; who has promised to raise his people up at the last day, and give them a name and place in his kingdom. Now what have you rendered to the Lord for all this? How have you requited him for all his goodness and mercy to you, in thus opening your eyes to see and know the truth? You have been ashamed to acknowledge him before the world. The fear of man has shut up your mouth, and made you dumb, when called upon to confess Christ before men. The love of popularity in the church, has made you a base and cringing hypocrite; professing what you do not believe, and hearing those you know to be earnest seekers after truth, reviled and accused of infidelity and heresy, &c., and you, like a pitiful coward sit still, and make no sign, even of disapproval, to such false accusations. Get you up in a snug corner, where you can be neither seen nor heard, you will confess, that "we have the scripture argument, and the truth on our side," but oh! don't mention it on any account; wait a little, the time is not yet come. Yet, when the truth becomes popular, when you can lose nothing by confessing it; when you can obtain the praise of man, and escape all danger and reproach, then you will be valiant for the truth; then you will say, come and see my zeal for the Lord!

And do you really think Christ will receive such service as this? Is this the way you follow him through evil, as well as good report? Oh, remember what he has declared to you, and to all who thus shun the cross: "Him who is ashamed of me, and of my words, before this wicked and adulterous generation, of him will the Son of man be ashamed, before his Father, and the holy angels." "Occupy till I come." Be valiant for the truth upon the earth.

But you may say, by way of excuse, these things are of minor importance, the belief in them is not necessary to salvation. Be it so; this is not the question; to others who have not enjoyed the light and knowledge you possess, they are not accountable for what they have not, but for the use, or abuse of what they have. "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." How do you know but this is the very touch-stone and trial of your faith and love to Christ? Your hope of life and immortality may, under God, depend upon your faithfulness and obedience to Christ and his truth. Do not imagine that the mere silent belief in the personal reign of Christ, the final destruction of the wicked, or the sleep of the dead till the resurrection, can be of any avail to you, or any one, without a practical use of these glorious doctrines of the gospel. A mere speculative faith will save no one; the devils believe, and tremble; you may believe, and perish. If your faith is dead, and produces no fruit, Christ will say to you, as he did to the barren fig-tree, "cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground?"

Remember, then, that the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. The world, the flesh, and the devil, oppose your entrance; they will lay every impediment in your way; and if the fear of man, the love of the world, or the indulgence of ease and popularity, will prove a sufficient temptation to keep you out of the kingdom, all I have to say is, the devil has had an easy job of it, and may keep his fiery darts for more noble game. J. P.

Letters Illustrative of Christian Experience.—No. 4.

My Dear Sister:—I will cite your attention to one or two more illustrations of the way of faith, that have come under my own observation, for I have often derived great benefit from learning just how others have been enabled to believe. The first one to which I will cite you, bore from the commencement the impress of the Divine signet. I will relate the entire circumstance, as it illustrates another truth connected with christian experience, viz., Divine guidance.

Several years ago, I attended a camp-meeting in W——. The last night of the meeting I entered a tent where a prayer meeting was in progress. Several were gathered in a circle as subjects of prayer. I felt much burdened in mind after entering the tent, and such an uneasiness of spirit took hold upon me, that, in order to obtain relief, I left the tent. I became immediately calm, and a "still small voice" internally said, "Go to U. tent." I was a stranger to its inmates, and hesitated. I met a friend, and invited her to go with me to the U. tent. She declined, and after wandering about a little, I reasoned thus, as I heard the voice of prayer and praise from the tent I had left: "I will go back and unite in the exercises of that meeting, and not indulge in those feelings that led me away, for they were doubtless the influence of temptation." With this resolve, I re-entered the tent. God's Spirit was evidently moving in the assembly, but I felt it not, or rather, I did not partake of its influence in the manner it was there operating. I again felt that burden roll upon my soul, and such a spirit of uneasiness again possessed me, that, finding I could not there find rest, I arose and left the tent. All was now calm within—perfect stillness reigned in my heart, and once more came that inward voice, saying, 'Go to U. tent.' It seemed passing strange to me why I should feel thus impressed to go to a tent where I was wholly unacquainted, but now I obeyed the impulse. As I passed within the door, the glory of God so came down upon me and filled my soul, that I gave utterance to the feeling by saying aloud, "Glory to God!" I felt that power was given unto me; I was "filled with the Holy Ghost," and for what purpose will soon be evident.

A class meeting was in progress. Soon after I had entered the tent, the leader addressed a young lady seated in the remotest corner of the tent. She was a penitent sinner, and requested prayers. The leader remarked, "We will offer prayer on your behalf." Once more that voice whispered, "Go kneel by her side, and teach her the way of faith." With difficulty I made my way to her, (for the tent was filled) and kneeled by her. My first inquiry was, "Are you willing to give yourself and your all to Christ?" "I am," was her prompt reply. Are you willing now to make the entire surrender of yourself to him?" "Yes, I am," said she decidedly. "Will you do it now?" "Yes." I requested her to say aloud, "O Lord, I give myself to thee, I will now to be thine." She did so very heartily. She was in earnest about it. I repeated to her some of the precious promises indicating that just at that point Christ had promised to accept and save her, closing with the language of the Apostle,—"Ye are servants to whomsoever ye yield yourselves servants to obey," and then added, "now you have consecrated yourself unto the Lord; you have yielded yourself to be his servant, to obey him henceforth; now he commands you to believe on him, and it is your duty now to reckon yourself the Lord's; say, "I am thine, Lord." Here, for the first time, nature began to shrink. "I want to feel that I am the Lord's before I say so," was her reply. That was perfectly natural, was it not? But no, she must now begin a life of faith, and, as I told her, that would bring the feeling assurance that she was the Lord's. First, her faith must rest upon the promise,—"I will receive you," and then, after faith had appropriated it, the witness would follow. She took encouragement, and said, "I am thine, Lord," "I am thine, Lord," several times; but the coveted feeling not being realized, she cried out, "Lord, let me feel that I am thine!" Once more I encouraged her to simply rest on the word of promise, and again with trembling she repeats the words, "I am thine, Lord;" but soon she prays, "Lord, let me feel that I am thine." Words of encouragement brought her back again, and she repeats the precious words, "I am thine, Lord," until her faith waxed so strong that she bore it upward to the throne, and when she laid it upon the altar, she was saved: but still the voice had not so spoken to her heart, imparting the joy of assurance. One more test of her faith, and the victory was won. I led her on differently from what I had ever done before with any individual, but I did but follow the promptings of the Invisible Teacher.

"Now, sister, say, 'Praise the Lord, I am his.'" "But I want to feel to praise him," said she, thus reverting back to her former difficulty. But God will have her detached from this. "Are you the Lord's?" "Yes," was her reply. "Ought you not to praise him that you are his—praise him for receiving you?" "Yes, but I want to feel to praise." "Come now, my sister, think no longer of your feelings, but praise the Lord for his goodness in receiving you. Say, 'Praise the Lord, I am his.' She did so for a moment, and then cried out, "Lord, let me feel to praise thee." "Feeling or no feeling, praise the Lord," said I. She began again, and soon her voice increased to a higher tone—the Spirit began to inspire praise—higher and higher still rose the voice of praise, and now with the "know so" in her heart, she could with feeling say, "Praise the Lord, I am his!" An individual upon my right seized my hand; she was in much distress of mind, and, while I was endeavoring to lead her to the point of entire consecration, she would ever and anon cry out, "*Anything but that, Lord! The exercises of the meeting had closed, but how many had prayed I knew not, and when they ceased I knew not. I had done the work God sent me there to perform; victory had been in that retired corner; and when I arose and looked around, not only my own soul, but the tent also, seemed filled with the Divine glory. My letter is long, and I will close by saying, "Feeling or no feeling, believe, and say with the sister, "Any way, Lord, only bless!" Yours in love,

The Two-Horned Beast.—No. 5.

That this power is now being developed with terrible precision to me is a matter [illegible] are described :—"It doeth great wonders . . . and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by means of those miracles which he had power to do in sight of the beast;" i. e., the beast whose dominion or power to [illegible]. This same character is noticed in Matt. 24 : 24, and after the 1260 days of tribulation; thus definitely marking the chronology of the "two-horned beast" power as being after the papal power. "Then (after the tribulation) if any man shall say, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; (precisely the work of the two-horned beast,) insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Paul calls this last infidel and anti-christian development the revelation "of Satan with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish, because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved." 2 Thess. 2 : 9, 10. Believing God procured righteousness for Abraham, and if we would not be found having on our own righteousness, we too should believe God.

Mr. Smith, in referring to this passage in Thess. says, (page 94,) "The passage, I conceive, contains a prophetic glance at the whole apostacy, both in its papal and antichristian form." Page 98,—"Thus we are taught in the prophetic parts of the sacred scriptures to expect the rise of a terrible atheistical power, and a vast influence of infidelity in the last days, or just previous to the millennium."

Paul, in his letter to the Ephesians, speaks more definitely concerning this power. He speaks of "the evil day," and the necessity of having on "the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles (cunning craftiness) of the Devil." Showing that the Devil will be the prime mover in opposition to the church; and in verse 12 of this 5th chap., he describes his agencies.—"For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against POWERS, against the RULERS of the DARKNESS of this world, against WICKED SPIRITS (marg.) in high places. . . . Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with TRUTH." The last conflict will then be under the control of wicked spirits, called, in 1 Tim. 4 : 1, "seducing spirits," teaching "doctrines of devils"—"thou shalt not surely die;" or, in a more modern phrase, there is no such thing as death."

That the spirits of devils, now manifest throughout the world, will involve the world with their anti-christian principles, and develop the real "Antichrist" (the two-horned beast of the Scriptures,) is fully proved from Rev. 16 : 13, 14.—"And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of Devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

Says Prof. Weethee, "Six propositions naturally flow from this text.

1. Those bodies symbolized by these unclean spirits will deluge the world in the last days with their doctrines.
2. These doctrines are antichristian.
3. These agents will work wonders. (Precisely the work [illegible] the two-horned beast.)
4. These doctrines will gain, by their [illegible] great associated power.
5. That associated power will league in battle against every opposition.
6. Their grand enemy will be found to be the WORD OF GOD AND HIS ARMY."

How perfectly are these "propositions" being fulfilled, though the author had not his eye on modern "[illegible]alism"—"unclean spirits." These [illegible] demand close attention. [illegible] the nations to [illegible] the great [illegible]. But what if [illegible] should go down [illegible] a brother. Then the great battle would not [illegible] spiritualism is the gathering [illegible]

POINTS OF RESEMBLANCE. p. 64.

"First point. . . . Frogs are certain harbingers [illegible] pestilence [illegible] ag. [illegible]. So likewise are the unclean spirits [illegible] portion of [illegible]. They go forth at the beginning of the pouring out of the vials, and are the [illegible] of [illegible] ag[illegible] which [illegible] occupy the [illegible] time between the [illegible] season of the [illegible] OF [illegible] AD[illegible] of our Savior.

Second point. Croaking. . . . How expressive when applied to the mass of the present age! (Yea, and still more expressive when applied to "UNCLEAN SPIRITS.")

Third point. No danger apprehended. The frog is esteemed harmless. No fear is entertained from them by the multitude. So with the wise (spiritualists) and their doctrines." So also with the lamb-like beast, though "he doeth great wonders, and speaks like a dragon.

On page 338 of Smith's Dissertations on the Prophecy, from which we have quoted, we have the following in connection with the sixth vial:

"The origin of this agency is interesting:—Out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. The dragon here is the devil, as we learn in Rev. 12 : 12. . . . The devil will be suffered to exercise a powerful agency among men at that period. . . . His operations will be multiform, peculiar and mischievous. And the great infidel power, and his tool, the papacy, will unite in dispatching their agents over the world. And so completely under the direction of the wicked one will the whole agency be found to be, that it is said, For they are spirits of devils. Their subtlety is indicated;—like frogs, unclean, hateful reptiles! Sly, out of sight, slippery, stationary, or swift in their motion, as will best answer their purpose; creeping into every apartment; . . . sly, yet bold, impudent and disgusting. Their power of deceit is noted. Working miracles; doing wonders in the sight of men."

"The depth of their scheme, the unity of their design, their incredible perseverance, the corruptions of the human heart, and the agency of Satan, will all unite to give the most astonishing force to their operations. Every incident, every corrupt passion, and all the power of sly insinuation will be pressed into their service. In a word, licentiousness, infidelity and false religion will unite their influence to aid the same cause! The extent of this agency is amazing; Going forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

What can be plainer than this, that Spiritualism, or the "spirits of Devils," will be the wonder-working, or miraculous power that will head up against the word of God and his army? H. PRATT.

A Movable Conscience.

There are some kinds of chemical substances which, being exposed at a low temperature, maintain their form and figure, but which, being subjected to a slight degree of heat, exhale and disappear. So it is with some men's consciences. For instance, let a man promise that he will bear such and such a part in a venture. Now, if the matter goes to a settlement, and the settlement is made so that his feelings are regarded, he feels himself bound to pay what he has promised. But if any one among those with whom he has been dealing is avaricious or grasping, and takes advantage of him, and if his feelings become wounded and inflamed, you will hear such a man say, "Well, if they had done right, I would have paid the money; but they have acted so meanly toward me, that I declare I won't pay a cent!" Just as though a man's obligations to pay what he has solemnly promised to pay, depended merely upon the fact of his being angry or in a good humor! Just as though conscience is to be heeded when a man's mind is serene and quiet, and to be laid aside when men are tempest-tossed with their own passions! What is the worth of a movable conscience which may be shifted at pleasure?—Beecher.

You have killed that Sermon.

The preacher labored faithfully this morning. Many were affected under the sermon. Among the rest were some of your children. Now is a good time for you to come in to help your pastor in the work upon your own family. But alas! instead of this, you have destroyed the feeling of conviction in the hearts of those affected. "How?" you ask in astonishment. Why, when returned from church, instead of talking with those serious children, you began to criticise the preacher in their hearing! During the sermon you were half asleep part of the time, and reading a hymn book another part; and now your work must be finished up in a criticism of the discourse. It was too long, or too short. It was too cold, or else rather boisterous. The hymns were inappropriate; the prayers too commonplace. Then the preacher was not dressed to suit. All this you have to talk before these children, but a little while ago so thoughtful. When you are done they are thoughtless no longer. You have made their cold. Your words have drawn off their good impressions.—Index.

The Soul.—No. 9.

We have now examined the first fifteen passages in the Bible where nephesh, the word rendered soul, occurs, but find no trace yet of an immortal soul. If the popular doctrine be true, it is most remarkable that we find no mention of the soul's immortality in the Bible records of the first two thousand years, in which we have a multitude of deaths recorded. If true, why is it that Satan is the only one who taught it, and for this reason is called a liar?

We will continue our examination, to see if we can find any thing from inspired men to harmonize with the saying of the great deceiver. The 16th text where nephesh occurs is in Gen. 14 : 21. "And the king of Sodom said unto Abram, give me the persons, (nephesh, marg. souls) and take the goods to thyself." Here we have another example of the primary meaning of nephesh. It is rendered person thirty times in the Old Testament. This is a plain, simple rendering of the word, and many passages would be better understood if person were substituted for soul.

17th example. Gen. 17 : 14. "That soul shall be cut off from his people." Here, again, is the primary use of nephesh.

18th text. Gen. 19 : 17. "And it came to pass when they had brought them forth abroad, that he said, escape for thy life, (nephesh,) look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain, escape to the mountain, lest thou be condemned." This is the angel's instruction to Lot when he left Sodom. In this example nephesh is used in its secondary sense; but, as we have before found, it is used in the same sense when applied to the brute creation, and never represents, when thus used, a separate, conscious identity.

The 19th example is in the 19th verse of this same chapter. "Behold now, thy servant hath found grace in thy sight and thou hast magnified thy mercy, which thou hast showed unto me in saving my life, (nephesh) and I cannot escape to the mountain, lest some evil take me, and I die." We apprehend Lot knew nothing about the popular idea of these days, that when a good man dies, he goes to live in glory, before the resurrection of the dead; if so, why so anxious to stay out of heaven, and live in this wicked world?

20th text. Gen. 19 : 20. "Behold now, this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little one; oh, let me escape thither, (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall live." What is the inference? If he does not escape thus, his soul, or himself may die. Does he mean that he may keep his immortal soul alive by fleeing into Zoar? The very idea is absurd. "My soul," in this last example, is equivalent to "myself," meaning the whole man.

In our next, we purpose to give the fourth and last signification of the word nephesh. And when we have examined its fourth use, we think our readers will have no difficulty in understanding any passage where this word occurs. The more thoroughly this subject is examined, the clearer the truth shines, and the more hideous, disjointed and deformed is the appearance of the fabled immortality of the soul. We think we speak advisedly, when we call the doctrine of the immortality of the soul a fable, which originated with Satan, and was first believed by the heathen. We could not ask to have this point clearer to our own mind. Praise the Lord, for the light that shines upon his holy word in these last days. If any of our readers are not satisfied that man is mortal, permit the writer to urge them to give this point a thorough and impartial examination before they call "the sleep of the dead" a 'damnable heresy.' They will find this truth peculiarly adapted to meet the tide of infidelity now setting in upon us. Brethren and sisters, awake to this subject. Let the fear of reproach have no power over you. "Stand up for Jesus."

☞ There are many who had rather meet their bitterest enemy in the field, than their own hearts in their closet.

☞ When we rightly understand the nature of dependence, there is no more opposition between dependence upon the Lord and dependence upon the neighbor, than there is between love to the Lord and love toward the neighbor.

Meeting at Poultney, Vt.

POULTNEY, Dec. [illegible]th, 185[illegible].

The interest in this place continues unabated. The Lord is doing a great work for this people. They are astonished at the simplicity of the Bible truth, and wonder why they have not seen it before. Many who thought they should never be able to see any consistency in the doctrine of the Scriptures, now embrace it with delight, rejoicing to see its harmony combined with the justice, love and mercy of God. This remark is particularly true in relation to the subject of future punishment. The church members are surprised to see a class of men interested who had left the place of worship, and seemed to care but little or nothing about any thing of a religious character. Yet this class of individuals are among the most noble hearted in community, and the first to embrace the truth when separated from the fables with which it has been enveloped. These men are not of that class whose opinions are only echoes of some rich or popular ones, but those who think for themselves. They are men that can be trusted in the hour of peril, when adverse winds blow a tempest around,—men who do not ask first, "Will this be popular?" "Will it give me reputation in society?" But they say, "give us the truth," if friends all forsake, and worldly hopes be blasted forever. We love to associate with such noble hearts, when their energies are thrown into the cause of Christ.

At this point of our report, permit the insertion of a note dropped upon the desk by an intelligent lady, at the close of one of our evening meetings. We introduce this, as one testimony among many, showing the effect of preaching on the destruction of the wicked; and, so far as we know, this is the uniform result in every place.

"MR. GRANT:—Sir, I have listened to your teachings with much pleasure, and I pray God it may prove with profit also. Your preaching is the first I ever listened to that did not sound to me like a serious inconsistency with the gentle character ever displayed by our blessed Savior while upon earth. Eternal punishment, as taught by those who are in the position of Bible teachers to the rest of mankind, has for many years produced a discord which was almost painful to me. A faith that fills the heart with love to God is the faith which the Bible teaches me, and may God bless you for the light you have given me upon some passages of Scripture which I have heard preached upon from childhood, ever leaving the feeling 'there is an error somewhere'—and, truly, there has been a great one.

Please accept this trifle, (a $2 1-2 gold piece) it was the gift of a dear friend many years ago. I now give it to the Lord. Remember me at the throne of grace is the wish of her who will try to pray, and praise God as never before."

There was no signature, and we have not yet become acquainted with this lady, but hope, if this meets her eye, to hear from her through the Crisis, as one of our contributors.

At the close of a discourse on the creation and nature of man, Mr. H. B. Cutting, a Universalist preacher, from Castleton, proposed to discuss the subject of man's immortality. The proposition was accepted and we discussed on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Nov. 29th, 30th, and Dec. 1st, the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That facts, philosophy and Scripture prove that man is mortal, body and spirit."

Our discussion was announced to commence at 7 o'clock, but at 6 1-2 o'clock every part of the hall, including the stairway, was so densely packed, that it was found necessary to close the doors, and begin the discussion, which was conducted with good feeling, and the most happy results in favor of the truth. The Bible was found to be fortified at every point against false and "vain philosophy," opinions and creeds of men; but in harmony with all facts and true philosophy. Instead of retarding the revival, it strengthened the young converts, and awakened new interest in the study of the Scriptures.

Thursday, Dec. 2nd, we went to Shrewsbury, expecting to have a discussion with Mr. Foster, a Universalist minister in that place, who had thrown out a very bold challenge, but was unwilling to discuss, when we came to the point, on account of poor health. We preached on the subject of future punishment, in his presence and that of his society, in the house occupied a part of the time by the Christian church, and the remainder by the Universalists. The truth was well received. We preached also on Friday and Saturday evenings, enjoying the hospitalities of Bro. [illegible] Kinder, the Christian preacher, [illegible] endorses the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked. [illegible] appears to be a faithful [illegible] minister of the New Testament.

Lord's day was spent with the interesting church in Rutland. Though suffering much slander and reproach from some popular professors in the place, they are living epistles, "known and read of all men."

Monday, Dec. 6th, or last evening, we returned to this place, and found the interest well sustained. Ten came forward for prayers, several backsliders confessed and found peace. The young converts are active in our meetings, and the revival tide is still rising. Praise the Lord.

The Sufficiency of Revelation.

"If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."—LUKE 16 : 31.

Both the sufficiency and perfection of Revelation are clearly referred to in the passage before us. We see its sufficiency in the nature and amount of the principles revealed; its perfection, in its complete adaptation to the wants of mankind. It is suited not only to the wants of one generation, but to all. It is an infinite store of knowledge; it is the fountain of wisdom, and the source of truth. It contains those elementary principles, a thorough knowledge of which will make wise unto salvation. It is not only full in its representation, having made provision for all the ills of life; but it is free, being offered to all, irrespective of moral attainments. Not only are men invited to "the truth," but they are informed that it can be purchased "without money, and without price." And in order that all may be without excuse, it is said, "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

"If they hear not Moses and the prophets," &c. This language was designed as a reproof to the Jews. Let us look at it, first, as applicable to the ancient people of God; and, secondly, as applicable to ourselves.

The history of the Jewish nation is made up of incidents and events of no ordinary character. Small in their beginning, for they were a mere handful, they, under the blessing of heaven, prospered into a nation. From some seventy souls who went down into Egypt, there "sprang" "so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is on the seashore innumerable." From the time we begin to mark the unparalled prosperity of this people, we are no less astonished at the mighty power of God displayed among them: "Marvellous things did he in the sight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the fields of Zoan." "He divided the sea, and caused them to pass through." "In the day-time also he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire." He opened the rock in the wilderness, and streams in the desert. He gave them to eat of "angels' food," and sent them the "corn of heaven." "He brought them to the border of his sanctuary," and, casting out the heathen before them, he "divided them an inheritance by line, and made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents." He watched over them, and they were to him as the "apple of his eye." He bestowed upon them the choicest of heaven's favors, and all was directed for their good. When they became ungrateful, and manifested a disposition to worship the gods of the nations; when they had tempted and provoked the "Most High," and kept not his testimonies; he did not at once destroy them, but, "being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity." "Yea, many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath." He sent them prophets who warned them against the awful sin of apostasy, and who did, at the same time, endeavor to recover them to a holy life. They had also the scriptures—the writings of the prophets—together with the Pentateuch—the writings of Moses—from these they might learn the will of heaven. If they did not know, the fault was their own; if they rejected Christ, it was because they had first rejected Moses; had they known practically the latter, they would have received the former. "Had ye," says Christ, "believed Moses, ye would have believed me, for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?"

The Jews sinned against great light! Not content with rejecting Moses and the prophets, they must fill up their cup by first rejecting, and then crucifying the Son of God. What more could be done for the Lord's vineyard than had been done? How insulting were the scribes and Pharisees, after Christ had wrought miracles and performed wonders, to say, "We would see a sign from thee!!" How sinful they were, after he had fulfilled so many prophecies, to say in his last expiring agony, "Let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him!" How forcible, yea, how applicable the language which the Savior addressed to them, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

We have two instances where this truth was practically developed and demonstrated. First, in the case of Lazarus. Here was an instance of a person being dead four days raised to life. It was a case that did not admit of doubt. The whole transaction was witnessed by a number of individuals in open daylight. A part of the witnesses were not believers in Christ, and yet they testify to the reality of the miracle. Here then is sufficient evidence against that class that Christ addressed. Not only did they not believe that Lazarus had been raised from the dead, but sought to put him to death. "They did not believe," though one had come from the dead. The same was true with regard to Christ. They hired the soldiers to report a falsehood in order to destroy the effect of his resurrection. Thus in a second instance, confirming the remark of Christ,—"If ye hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will ye be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

Bro. D. T. Taylor.

We have just received painful intelligence from our dear Bro. Taylor. He says:—"Alas, how heavily drags the time to me. I am doing nothing; have not preached but two Sundays for four weeks. No remedy yet reaches my disease, which is spinal,—also ossification [changing to bone] of the heart. I may never recover. Yet, believing in the power and efficacy of faith, I humbly and earnestly request the brethren every where to pray God for my restoration to health."

O let the prayer of faith ascend for our dear brother, that he may be speedily restored to health and active labor in the vineyard of the Lord. We propose, that those who have faith in God, should fast Friday night, Dec. 24th, and retire to their closets at 6 o'clock, if convenient, to unite in presenting a petition to our heavenly Father for Bro. Taylor's recovery. "The prayer of faith shall save the sick."

For the Crisis.

A Name.

Some have recently appeared scrupulous relative to the name they should bear as an association of christians. Many contend that, as a church, they should bear no denominational title except "The church of God," or "Church of Christ," averring this to be the appellation by which Christ's followers were scripturally designated.

Now where God particularizes, I would be careful to observe all he has commanded. For whatever the injunction laid on man by his Creator, is highly important to be complied with, whether the test be eating or refraining from the same. Obedience is God's test. But, my punctilious Bro. or Sister, neither, or both of these titles, cover the appellations which formerly designated Christ's followers from the world. Jesus Christ almost invariably called them "Disciples." I do not recollect as he spake of them as a "Church" but in one or two instances. If he had been as fearful as some of bearing a semblance to others in name, I doubt whether he would ever have denominated them "Disciples" at all. There existed "The Pharisee's Disciples." John's "Disciples," Plato's Disciples, and his most bitter opponents, the Jews, who gloried in calling themselves "Moses' Disciples." A disciple means a learner—one who receives instruction from another. Hence the propriety of the name. Because others were called "Disciples," it did not prove any affinity existed between them. There exists quite a body of believers who are yet pleased to hold this as a denominational title, which is well enough. I see no particular virtue or sin in thus doing.

At a subsequent period, Christ's disciples were "called Christians," first at Antioch. Hence quite a large body of God's children have thought best to adopt this as a denominational title; but outsiders often call them Christians. But who gave this name to the disciples at Antioch is quite doubtful. Probably the residents of Antioch—outside of the "Disciples." But, as the Scriptures are silent relative to the originator of this name, perhaps we should not conjecture. All who desire to

The Two-Horned Beast.—No. 5.

That this power is now being developed with terrible precision to me is a matter [illegible] ... ascribed :—"It doeth great wonders ... and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by means of those miracles which he had power to do in sight of the beast;" i. e., the beast whose dominion or power to [illegible]. This same character is noticed in Matt. 24: 24, and after the 1260 days of tribulation; thus definitely marking the chronology of the "two-horned beast" power as being after the papal power. "Then (after the tribulation) if any man shall say, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; (precisely the work of the two-horned beast,) insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." Paul calls this last infidel and anti-christian development the revelation "of Satan with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish, because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved." 2 Thess. 2: 9, 10. Believing God procured righteousness for Abraham, and if we would not be found having on our own righteousness, we too should believe God.

Mr. Smith, in referring to this passage in Thess. says, (page 94,) "The passage, I conceive, contains a prophetic glance at the whole apostacy, both in its papal and antichristian form." Page 98.—"Thus we are taught in the prophetic parts of the sacred scriptures to expect the rise of a terrible atheistical power, and a vast influence of infidelity in the last days, or just previous to the millennium."

Paul, in his letter to the Ephesians, speaks more definitely concerning this power. He speaks of "the evil day," and the necessity of having on "the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles (cunning craftiness) of the Devil." Showing that the Devil will be the prime mover in opposition to the church; and in verse 12 of this 5th chap., he describes his agencies.—"For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against POWERS, against the RULERS of the DARKNESS of this world, against WICKED SPIRITS (marg.) in high places. . . . Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with TRUTH." The last conflict will then be under the control of wicked spirits, called, in 1 Tim. 4: 1, "seducing spirits," teaching "doctrines of devils"—"thou shalt not surely die;" or, in a more modern phrase, there is no such thing as death."

That the spirits of devils, now manifest throughout the world, will involve the world with their anti-christian principles, and develop the real "Antichrist" (the two-horned beast of the Scriptures,) is fully proved from Rev. 16: 13, 14.—"And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of Devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

Says Prof. Weethee, "Six propositions naturally flow from this text.

1. Those bodies symbolized by these unclean spirits will deluge the world in the last days with their doctrines.

2. These doctrines are antichristian.

3. These agents will work wonders. (Precisely the work of the two-horned beast.)

4. These doctrines will gain, by their deceptions, one great associated power.

5. The associated power will league in battle against every opposition.

6. Their grand enemy will be found to be the WORD OF GOD AND HIS ARMY."

How perfectly are these "propositions" being fulfilled, though the author had not the eye on modern "[illegible]"—"unclean spirits." These [illegible] demand close attention. They [illegible] the nations to the battle of the great day. But what if [illegible] should go [illegible] a brother. Then the great battle would not [illegible] is the gathering [illegible] POINTS OF RESEMBLANCE. [illegible]

[illegible] point.—1. Frogs are certain [illegible] ... So likewise are the unclean spirits [illegible] portion of [illegible]. They go forth at the beginning of the pouring out of the vials, and are the [illegible] of [illegible] agents which occupy the [illegible] time between [illegible] of the [illegible] and [illegible] advent of our Savior.

Second point. Croaking. How expressive when applied to the mass of the present age! (Yes, and still more expressive when applied to "UNCLEAN SPIRITS.")

Third point. No danger apprehended. The frog is esteemed harmless. No fear is entertained from them by the multitude. So with the wise (spiritualists) and their doctrines." So also with the lamb-like beast, though "he doeth great wonders, and speaks like a dragon.

On page 338 of Smith's Dissertations on the Prophecy, from which we have quoted, we have the following in connection with the sixth vial:

"The origin of this agency is interesting:—Out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. The dragon here is the devil, as we learn in Rev. 12: 12. . . . The devil will be suffered to exercise a powerful agency among men at that period. . . . His operations will be multiform, peculiar and mischievous. And the great infidel power, and his tool, the papacy, will unite in dispatching their agents over the world. And so completely under the direction of the wicked one will the whole agency be found to be, that it is said, For they are spirits of devils. Their subtlety is indicated;—like frogs, unclean, hateful reptiles! Sly, out of sight, slippery, stationary, or swift in their motion, as will best answer their purpose; creeping into every apartment; . . . sly, yet bold, impudent and disgusting. Their power of deceit is noted. Working miracles; doing wonders in the sight of men."

"The depth of their scheme, the unity of their design, their incredible perseverance, the corruptions of the human heart, and the agency of Satan, will all unite to give the most astonishing force to their operations. Every incident, every corrupt passion, and all the power of sly insinuation will be pressed into their service. In a word, licentiousness, infidelity and false religion will unite their influence to aid the same cause! The extent of this agency is amazing; Going forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

What can be plainer than this, that Spiritualism, or the "spirits of Devils," will be the wonder-working, or miraculous power that will head up against the word of God and his army? H. PRATT.

A Movable Conscience.

There are some kinds of chemical substances which, being exposed at a low temperature, maintain their form and figure, but which, being subjected to a slight degree of heat, exhale and disappear. So it is with some men's consciences. For instance, let a man promise that he will bear such and such a part in a venture. Now, if the matter goes to a settlement, and the settlement is made so that his feelings are regarded, he feels himself bound to pay what he has promised. But if any one among those with whom he has been dealing is avaricious or grasping, and takes advantage of him, and if his feelings become wounded and inflamed, you will hear such a man say, "Well, if they had done right, I would have paid the money; but they have acted so meanly toward me, that I declare I won't pay a cent!" Just as though a man's obligations to pay what he has solemnly promised to pay, depended merely upon the fact of his being angry or in a good humor! Just as though conscience is to be heeded when a man's mind is serene and quiet, and to be laid aside when men are tempest-tossed with their own passions! What is the worth of a movable conscience which may be shifted at pleasure?—Beecher.

You have killed that Sermon.

The preacher labored faithfully this morning. Many were affected under the sermon. Among the rest were some of your children. Now is a good time for you to come in to help your pastor in the work upon your own family. But alas! instead of this, you have destroyed the feeling of conviction in the hearts of those affected. "How?" you ask in astonishment. Why, when returned from church, instead of talking with those serious children, you began to criticise the preacher in their hearing! During the sermon you were half asleep part of the time, and reading a hymn book another part; and now your work must be finished up in a criticism of the discourse. It was too long, or too short. It was too cold, or else rather boisterous. The hymns were inappropriate; the prayers too [illegible]. Then the preacher was not dressed to suit. All this you have to talk before these children, but a little while ago so thoughtful. When you are done they are thoughtless [illegible]. Your words have drawn off their good impressions.—Index.

The Soul.—No. 9.

We have now examined the first fifteen passages in the Bible where nephesh, the word rendered soul, occurs, but find no trace yet of an immortal soul. If the popular doctrine be true, it is most remarkable that we find no mention of the soul's immortality in the Bible records of the first two thousand years, in which we have a multitude of deaths recorded. If true, why is it that Satan is the only one who taught it, and for this reason is called a liar?

We will continue our examination, to see if we can find any thing from inspired men to harmonize with the saying of the great deceiver. The 16th text where nephesh occurs is in Gen. 14: 21. "And the king of Sodom said unto Abram, give me the persons, (nephesh, marg. souls) and take the goods to thyself." Here we have another example of the primary meaning of nephesh. It is rendered person thirty times in the Old Testament. This is a plain, simple rendering of the word, and many passages would be better understood if person were substituted for soul.

17th example. Gen. 17: 14. "That soul shall be cut off from his people." Here, again, is the primary use of nephesh.

18th text. Gen. 19: 17. "And it came to pass when they had brought them forth abroad, that he said, escape for thy life, (nephesh,) look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain, escape to the mountain, lest thou be condemned." This is the angel's instruction to Lot when he left Sodom. In this example nephesh is used in its secondary sense; but, as we have before found, it is used in the same sense when applied to the brute creation, and never represents, when thus used, a separate, conscious identity.

The 19th example is in the 19th verse of this same chapter. "Behold now, thy servant hath found grace in thy sight and thou hast magnified thy mercy, which thou hast showed unto me in saving my life, (nephesh) and I cannot escape to the mountain, lest some evil take me, and I die." We apprehend Lot knew nothing about the popular idea of these days, that when a good man dies, he goes to live in glory, before the resurrection of the dead; if so, why so anxious to stay out of heaven, and live in this wicked world?

20th text. Gen. 19: 20. "Behold now, this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little one; oh, let me escape thither, (is it not a little one?) and my soul shall live." What is the inference? If he does not escape thus, his soul, or himself may die. Does he mean that he may keep his immortal soul alive by fleeing into Zoar? The very idea is absurd. "My soul," in this last example, is equivalent to "myself," meaning the whole man.

In our next, we purpose to give the fourth and last signification of the word nephesh. And when we have examined its fourth use, we think our readers will have no difficulty in understanding any passage where this word occurs. The more thoroughly this subject is examined, the clearer the truth shines, and the more hideous, disjointed and deformed is the appearance of the fabled immortality of the soul. We think we speak advisedly, when we call the doctrine of the immortality of the soul a fable, which originated with Satan, and was first believed by the heathen. We could not ask to have this point clearer to our own mind. Praise the Lord, for the light that shines upon his holy word in these last days. If any of our readers are not satisfied that man is mortal, permit the writer to urge them to give this point a thorough and impartial examination before they call "the sleep of the dead" a 'damnable heresy.' They will find this truth peculiarly adapted to meet the tide of infidelity now setting in upon us. Brethren and sisters, awake to this subject. Let the fear of reproach have no power over you. "Stand up for Jesus."

☞ There are many who had rather meet their bitterest enemy in the field, than their own hearts in their closet.

☞ When we rightly understand the nature of dependence, there is no more opposition between dependence upon the Lord and dependence upon the neighbor, than there is between love to the Lord and love toward the neighbor.

Meetings at Poultney, Vt.

POULTNEY, Dec. [illegible]th, 1858.

The interest in this place continues unabated. The Lord is doing a great work for this people. They are astonished at the simplicity of the Bible truth, and wonder why they have not seen it before. Many who thought they should never be able to see any consistency in the doctrine of the Scriptures, now embrace it with delight, rejoicing to see its harmony combined with the justice, love and mercy of God. This remark is particularly true in relation to the subject of future punishment. The church members are surprised to see a class of men interested who had left the place of worship, and seemed to care but little or nothing about any thing of a religious character. Yet this class of individuals are among the most noble-hearted in community, and the first to embrace the truth when separated from the fables with which it has been enveloped. These men are not of that class whose opinions are only echoes of some rich or popular ones, but those who think for themselves. They are men that can be trusted in the hour of peril, when adverse winds blow a tempest around,—men who do not ask first, "Will this be popular?" "Will it give me reputation in society?" But they say, "give us the truth," if friends all forsake, and worldly hopes be blasted forever. We love to associate with such noble hearts, when their energies are thrown into the cause of Christ.

At this point of our report, permit the insertion of a note dropped upon the desk by an intelligent lady, at the close of one of our evening meetings. We introduce this, as one testimony among many, showing the effect of preaching on the destruction of the wicked; and, so far as we know, this is the uniform result in every place.

"MR. GRANT:—Sir, I have listened to your teachings with much pleasure, and I pray God it may prove with profit also. Your preaching is the first I ever listened to that did not sound to me like a serious inconsistency with the gentle character ever displayed by our blessed Savior while upon earth. Eternal punishment, as taught by those who are in the position of Bible teachers to the rest of mankind, has for many years produced a discord which was almost painful to me. A faith that fills the heart with love to God is the faith which the Bible teaches me, and may God bless you for the light you have given me upon some passages of Scripture which I have heard preached upon from childhood, ever leaving the feeling 'there is an error somewhere'—and, truly, there has been a great one.

Please accept this trifle, (a $2 1-2 gold piece) it was the gift of a dear friend many years ago. I now give it to the Lord. Remember me at the throne of grace is the wish of her who will try to pray, and praise God as never before."

There was no signature, and we have not yet become acquainted with this lady, but hope, if this meets her eye, to hear from her through the Crisis, as one of our contributors.

At the close of a discourse on the creation and nature of man, Mr. H. B. Cutting, a Universalist preacher, from Castleton, proposed to discuss the subject of man's immortality. The proposition was accepted and we discussed on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, Nov. 29th, 30th, and Dec. 1st, the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That facts, philosophy and Scripture prove that man is mortal, body and spirit."

Our discussion was announced to commence at 7 o'clock, but at 6 1-2 o'clock every part of the hall, including the stairway, was so densely packed, that it was found necessary to close the doors, and begin the discussion, which was conducted with good feeling, and the most happy results in favor of the truth. The Bible was found to be fortified at every point against false and "vain philosophy," opinions and creeds of men; but in harmony with all facts and true philosophy. Instead of retarding the revival, it strengthened the young converts, and awakened new interest in the study of the Scriptures.

Thursday, Dec. 2nd, we went to Shrewsbury, expecting to have a discussion with Mr. Foster, a Universalist minister in that place, who had thrown out a very bold challenge, but was unwilling to discuss, when we came to the point, on account of poor health. We preached on the subject of future punishment, in his presence and that of his society, in the house occupied a part of the time by the Christian church, and the remainder by the Universalist. The truth was well received. We preached also on Friday and Saturday evenings, enjoying the hospitalities of Bro. [illegible] der, the Christian preacher, who fully endorses the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked. [illegible] appears to be a faithful [illegible] minister of the New Testament.

Lord's day was spent with the interesting church in Rutland. Though suffering much slander and reproach from some popular professors in the place, they are living epistles, "known and read of all men."

Monday, Dec. 6th, or last evening, we returned to this place, and found the interest well sustained. Ten came forward for prayers, several backsliders confessed and found peace. The young converts are active in our meetings, and the revival tide is still rising. Praise the Lord.

The Sufficiency of Revelation.

"If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."—LUKE 16: 31.

Both the sufficiency and perfection of Revelation are clearly referred to in the passage before us. We see its sufficiency in the nature and amount of the principles revealed; its perfection, in its complete adaptation to the wants of mankind. It is suited not only to the wants of one generation, but to all. It is an infinite store of knowledge; it is the fountain of wisdom, and the source of truth. It contains those elementary principles, a thorough knowledge of which will make wise unto salvation. It is not only full in its representation, having made provision for all the ills of life; but it is free, being offered to all, irrespective of moral attainments. Not only are men invited to "the truth," but they are informed that it can be purchased "without money, and without price." And in order that all may be without excuse, it is said, "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

"If they hear not Moses and the prophets," &c. This language was designed as a reproof to the Jews. Let us look at it, first, as applicable to the ancient people of God; and, secondly, as applicable to ourselves.

The history of the Jewish nation is made up of incidents and events of no ordinary character. Small in their beginning, for they were a mere handful, they, under the blessing of heaven, prospered into a nation. From some seventy souls who went down into Egypt, there "sprang" "so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is on the seashore innumerable." From the time we begin to mark the unparalled prosperity of this people, we are no less astonished at the mighty power of God displayed among them: "Marvellous things did he in the sight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the fields of Zoan." "He divided the sea, and caused them to pass through." "In the day-time also he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire." He opened the rock in the wilderness, and streams in the desert. He gave them to eat of "angels' food," and sent them the "corn of heaven." "He brought them to the border of his sanctuary," and, casting out the heathen before them, he "divided them an inheritance by line, and made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents." He watched over them, and they were to him as the "apple of his eye." He bestowed upon them the choicest of heaven's favors, and all was directed for their good. When they became ungrateful, and manifested a disposition to worship the gods of the nations; when they had tempted and provoked the "Most High," and kept not his testimonies; he did not at once destroy them, but, "being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity." "Yea, many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath." He sent them prophets who warned them against the awful sin of apostasy, and who did, at the same time, endeavor to recover them to a holy life. They had also the scriptures—the writings of the prophets—together with the Pentateuch—the writings of Moses—from these they might learn the will of heaven. If they did not know, the fault was their own; if they rejected Christ, it was because they had first rejected Moses; had they known practically the latter, they would have received the former. "Had ye," says Christ, "believed Moses, ye would have believed me, for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?"

The Jews sinned against great light. Not content with rejecting Moses and the prophets, they must fill up their cup by first rejecting, and then crucifying the Son of God. What more could be done for the Lord's vineyard that had been done? How insulting were the scribes and Pharisees, after Christ had wrought miracles and performed wonders, to say, "We would see a sign from thee!!" How singular they were, after he had fulfilled so many prophecies, to say in his last expiring agony, "Let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him!" How forcible, yea, how applicable the language which the Savior addressed to them, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

We have two instances where this truth was practically developed and demonstrated. First, in the case of Lazarus. Here was an instance of a person being dead four days raised to life. It was a case that did not admit of doubt. The whole transaction was witnessed by a number of individuals in open daylight. A part of the witnesses were not believers in Christ, and yet they testify to the reality of the miracle. Here then is sufficient evidence against that class that Christ addressed. Not only did they not believe that Lazarus had been raised from the dead, but sought to put him to death. "They did not believe," though one had come from the dead. The same was true with regard to Christ. They hired the soldiers to report a falsehood in order to destroy the effect of his resurrection. Thus in a second instance, confirming the remark of Christ,—"If ye hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will ye be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."

Bro. D. T. Taylor.

We have just received painful intelligence from our dear Bro. Taylor. He says:—"Alas, how heavily drags the time to me. I am doing nothing; have not preached but two Sundays for four weeks. No remedy yet reaches my disease, which is spinal,—also ossification [changing to bone] of the heart. I may never recover. Yet, believing in the power and efficacy of faith, I humbly and earnestly request the brethren every where to pray God for my restoration to health."

O let the prayer of faith ascend for our dear brother, that he may be speedily restored to health and active labor in the vineyard of the Lord. We propose, that those who have faith in God, should fast Friday night, Dec. 24th, and retire to their closets at 6 o'clock, if convenient, to unite in presenting a petition to our heavenly Father for Bro. Taylor's recovery. "The prayer of faith shall save the sick."

For the Crisis.

A Name.

Some have recently appeared scrupulous relative to the name they should bear as an association of christians. Many contend that, as a church, they should bear no denominational title except "The church of God," or "Church of Christ," averring this to be the appellation by which Christ's followers were scripturally designated.

Now where God particularizes, I would be careful to observe all he has commanded. For whatever the injunction laid on man by his Creator, is highly important to be complied with, whether the test be eating or refraining from the same. Obedience is God's test. But, my punctilious Bro. or Sister, neither, or both of these titles, cover the appellations which formerly designated Christ's followers from the world. Jesus Christ almost invariably called them "Disciples." I do not recollect as he spake of them as a "Church" but in one or two instances. If he had been as fearful as some of bearing a semblance to others in name, I doubt whether he would ever have denominated them "Disciples" at all. There existed "The Pharisee's Disciples," John's "Disciples," Plato's Disciples, and his most bitter opponents, the Jews, who gloried in calling themselves "Moses' Disciples." A disciple means a learner—one who receives instruction from another. Hence the propriety of the name. Because others were called "Disciples," it did not prove any affinity existed between them. There exists quite a body of believers who are yet pleased to hold this as a denominational title, which is well enough. I see no particular virtue or sin in thus doing.

At a subsequent period, Christ's disciples were "called Christians," first at Antioch. Hence quite a large body of God's children have thought best to adopt this as a denominational title; but outsiders often call them Christians. But who gave this name to the disciples at Antioch is quite doubtful. Probably the residents of Antioch—outside of the "Disciples." But, as the Scriptures are silent relative to the originator of this name, perhaps we should not conjecture. All who desire to [illegible] inational title, have a perfect right [illegible] [illegible] But [illegible], inspiration claims no virtue for this [illegible].

But has God allowed the creatures of His footstool the privilege of choosing names to suit their own convenience and taste? It most certainly has. This privilege seemed to be granted Adam at the first. There are few exceptions to this general rule; for instance, there were certain illustrious persons whose names God would have expressive of their character,—of the work they were to accomplish,—the position they were to occupy; or indicating some peculiar phase of his professed church, as Abraham, John the Baptist, Lo-ammi, Lo-ruhama, Jesus, &c. And when God says the name must be John, it will not answer to call it Zechariah, if all the relatives do desire it. Though Zechariah was an excellent name, signifying "the memorial of Jehovah." But this will not answer for his son, that must be John; which Dr. Clarke says, "should always be written Jehovah chanan," meaning, "the grace, gift, or mercy of Jehovah." How significant of the great work he was to perform, to prepare the way for the Savior of lost man!

But the instances are very rare where Jehovah ever interferes with names. This prerogative generally belongs to man. Of course God has no need of names. He can comprehend every thing, from the least to the greatest, equally without a name as with. But we are the poor, weak creatures that stand in need of names; therefore God allows us to give names that we can comprehend, and that will designate the different things of which we may desire to speak. Every nation has a different name for a Supreme Being; but each alike intelligent to our Creator; and the same may be said of all other names.

When God built the first man out of the dust of the earth, he gave him a very appropriate name, one that was not very significant of Divinity, or that was calculated to elate him. It was "red earth!" or in English, Adam, which means "red earth." And when a companion was formed for him, God called them both Adam; that is, red earth. But the man for convenience gave another name to his wife. But did God consider it an infringement upon his order, because he called his wife Eve? Nay, verily. Though he could comprehend and designate between two bearing the same name, it would be a convenience for them to have this addition. So with God's children. He well knows who are his, and recognizes such as belonging to his church. But think you he will consider it a violation of his order when we adopt a name expressive of our faith, especially when that faith is so peculiar as to differ from most of the professed churches of God? It does appear to me we should glorify God in this period of the world's history to do so.

It is well known that very few of the so-called evangelical churches, as a body, preach, pray, or sing, about the personal Second Advent of Jesus Christ. Indeed, many of said churches discard the doctrine altogether—a doctrine on which hangs all the christian's hope of future life and glory. Now that there exists a little company who so love this event that they feel inclined to obey the divine injunction, to actually haste unto the coming of the Lord, what denominational name shall they bear for convenience sake among men? Shall it not be something expressive of that doctrine which has made them thus peculiar—a gazing stock to the world, etc.? As many, if not most of the religious sects ignore the personal second advent of Christ, would it not be proper for us to show, by our very name as well as nature, we consider it the crowning point of the gospel hope? Looking and waiting for Jesus has identified us before the world as a peculiar people; and for one I am willing to stand before the world an acknowledged believer in the second advent of Jesus Christ. Though the world, and many that profess to be separate from the world, have made the waiting for Jesus very unpopular, I do not feel ashamed of my real name. I am truly waiting for Jesus' second advent; and why is not the name that expresses this faith appropriate? We see the Scriptures are by no means imperative in this matter. But if we must be particular to the letter for a New Testament name, which one shall we take? There are quite a number of them. The Master usually called his followers "Disciples;" and once or twice as a "Church." Afterward the inspired apostles called them "Believers"—"Church of God"—"Church of Christ," and somebody called them "Christians."

Now, Brs. and Srs., if we take a New Testament name, which shall we take? If the Master had desired us to bear one of these names, would he not have told us which?

For the Crisis.

Advent Itinerancy.

BRO. GRANT:—I send you a few more thoughts upon this subject; for as long as the Gospel dispensation lasts, it will be necessary for the ministers of Christ to travel over hill and dale, through heat and cold and storms, to feed the sheep and lambs, and hunt up those who are wandering, and bring them back to the fold. But how are they to be sustained in their labors of love? Many who reap spiritual things from this self-denying labor are very loth to sow even carnal things. In some instances, where congregations have been so wonderfully blessed by the ministrations of some of the servants of God, that they have wholly forgotten that the minister had aught of his own depending upon him for life's sustenance. This negligence is contributing may be justifiable when the preacher has a salary, or is employed in an association where he is sure of receiving a compensation; but when it is known that a man leaves his home and all its comforts, and undergoes all the perplexities incident to a traveling preacher, who is obliged to throw himself and family upon the mercy of those for whom this sacrifice is made, after receiving the benefits of his visit, to send him off with a mere God bless you, and come again soon, is wholly unchristian. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and the duty of supporting the minister of the Gospel is just as imperative as any other.

No doubt one great cause of deficiency amongst us is the want of a systematic plan for raising funds for the maintenance of the Gospel. In the Apostolic age, St. Paul exhorted his brethren to lay by them in store weekly, as God had prospered them, that there be no gatherings when he came; and the adoption of this plan at the present time, would save the laborers in the Lord's vineyard much embarrassment.

I believe in a systematic organization for the maintenance of the ordinances of the Gospel; not a cumbersome code of by-laws and creeds and resolutions and preambles; but a few scriptural commands and admonitions embodied in the form of a covenant, is sufficient for the true child of God. This has been adopted in many places, and its beneficial results have proved its importance. The following is from the memorandum of one of those who are engaged in this missionary work.

"Started out on a three week's mission. Travelled 116 miles to get to an appointment. Stopped on the way. Walked six miles, preached twice, and got an earnest request to come again soon, but not one cent to pay expenses. Attended several other meetings with the same result. Went on to my appointment, which was 2 1-2 miles from the depot. Started on foot, carrying a heavy valise—blistered my feet—was a little tried—thought some of the brethren who had horses and carriages idle, ought to find conveyance to and from the railroad. Got to the place—found a good home and a pleasant family. At meeting God attended the word. Seven rose for prayers, and brethren abundantly blessed. Next morning started for the depot on foot. Soon it began to rain, got a little wet, but arrived at the depot in season for the train. By this time I had been out four days, and paid out more than I had received. As brother present thought if the other two weeks would be as profitable as this, he did not wonder there were no more engaged in this kind of labor; and that no one, unless God really required it of them, would endure these privations."

What an awful account some will have to settle in the judgment court for negligence of duties. While some are sacrificing the comforts of home for the salvation of souls, others are having a large salary, and doing nothing comparatively for Christ. The weeping day is at hand when God will put righteousness to the line and justice to the plummet.

D. N. B[illegible].

☞ Rev. John Hickling, the oldest Methodist preacher in the world, and the last survivor of the "helpers" of John Wesley, died in England a short time since. He was in the 71st year of his ministry, and was nearly 93 years old.

[illegible]

Died, in Rutland, Vt., Nov. 6th, Sr. ELIZA CLARK, wife of Hannah Clark, aged [illegible] years.

Sr. Clark has been a consistent christian for twenty-five years. She first united with the Christian church in Shrewsbury, and afterwards associated with the Baptist Church [illegible], with the privilege of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] hope of a future life is in the resurrection of the dead at the coming of Christ, she embraced this hope with joy and died triumphantly in this faith, believing she should sleep but a short time. When first told she must soon die, she exclaimed, "Bless the Lord." Her last exhortations to the family and friends were of the most [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] "Christian Advent Church" in Rutland, which has lost a faithful member, whose example will be remembered with pleasure and imitated with profit. The funeral was attended by Eld. L. Howard.—ED.

Died, in Brimfield, Mass., Oct. 23d, ALVIN [illegible], son of Bro. J. E. and Sister Ainsworth, aged 19 years.

The subject of this notice was industrious, well beloved, and obedient to his parents; rare qualities in this degenerate age. Our afflicted brother and sister request the prayers of the church for grace to sustain them in this time of deep sorrow.

"How long shall death the tyrant reign?"
"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." "HE will swallow up death in victory, and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces." Isa. 25: 8. Discourse, by request, from Ps. 25: 17.—"The troubles of my heart are enlarged: O bring thou me out of my distresses."

H. PLATT.

"Farewell, dear child! I bid adieu,
How deep the anguish of the heart!
Our loss is great—we weep for you—
Yet God can heal the painful smart.

We miss thee here in every place,
Thy voice no more we hear:
Silent thou sleep'st in death's embrace,
Nor knowest joy nor fear.

Our thoughts will linger round the spot;
Our tears bedew thy lonely bed;
With feelings ne'er to be forgot,
We oft will weep around thy head.

Thy parents oft with flowing tears,
And brothers round thy grave will stand;
Thy brothers, too, in after years
Will weep thy loss in this drear land."

Died, in Somerville, Mass., on the 8th day of the present month, our beloved and respected Sister PRESCOTT DICKINSON, aged 62 years and 8 months.

Her fatal disease was hemorrhage of the lungs. Our sister had been more or less feeble for several years, and a large part of the time confined to the house, but no serious apprehensions were entertained by the family of immediate decease, and therefore the stroke fell upon them very suddenly.

Sister Dickinson was, in the full sense of the word, a christian. She had been a professor of religion for many years, and had adorned that profession with a "well ordered life and godly conversation." She was a mother in Israel truly, as many of us in the ministry can testify who have made her home our home, and have been entertained with her kind hospitalities and holy conversation. She was a firm believer in the doctrine of immortality through Jesus Christ alone, to be given at his personal appearing.

Sister D. has left a kind husband and several lovely and loving children to mourn her loss. May the blessing of the Lord rest on them, and bring them finally, with wife and mother, to the land of rest and glory.

The funeral was attended on Saturday the 11th, at 2 P. M., by a large number of sympathizing friends. Services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Averill and the writer.

E. BURNHAM.

Boston, Dec. 13th, 1858.

Died, in Roxbury, Mass., Nov. 28th, 1858, of brain fever, CAROLINE, wife of Andrew J. Magine, aged 25 years.

Sr. M. was a great sufferer; but she rests where trouble never enters. She was a member of the church in this place for some years, and is the first upon whom death has laid his cold and icy hands. [illegible] afflicted us, but his will be done. She is gone, and we shall see her no more until the trumpet sounds and the dead in Christ shall rise to immortality. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn her loss. This church deeply sympathizes with her bereaved companion in his affliction. The hope of soon meeting her in that land where death never enters has sustained him thus far, and our earnest prayer is it may continue to do so until the end. May God grant, for his Son's sake, that this severe affliction may be sanctified to the husband and mourning friends [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] praise to him forever. It is considered certain that the Great Eastern will be ready for her first trip to Portland by midsummer next.

The London Times, in response to the defense by the [illegible] of Commissioner Reed, reiterates its charges against him, and says that a comparison of the English treaty, which obtains everything, with the American treaty, which obtains nothing, is all that is necessary to prove its assertion. The same journal has a satirical article on the proposition alleged to be in contemplation at Washington to place a tax on tea, drawing attention to the manner in which a like proposition was treated at Boston in 1773. An American self-imposed tea tax certainly teaches one lesson, and that is, that it is not a bad government, so much as a meddling, domineering government, that alienates the members of a free State.

The Tralee Chronicle publishes the following letter from Valentia, dated Nov. 21:—Nothing of importance occurred since my last, until Friday, when the weather was so fine that no further pretext could be advanced for not proceeding with the laying down of the shore end of the cable. The vessels accordingly proceeded to sea, and succeeded in submerging the few miles of shore cable, and making a splice with the deep sea portion, about five miles off Douglas Head. This operation was easily performed, and it is much to be regretted that the remaining seven miles of shore cable left at Greenwich, was not brought here and added to the part now laid down. Had this been done, there is no doubt but the result would be satisfactory. This is more evident from the fact that after passing the spot where the shore end terminates, some of the men, in their anxiety to continue the underrunning of the small cable, discovered a kink, leaving the conducting wire exposed to the water, and therefore injuring to some extent the conducting power of the wire. The defective part was immediately cut out, but the underrunning was discontinued, though it is probable that other defects of the kind could have been discovered had they proceeded. This cannot be said to be giving the recent cable a fair trial. I am not aware that the shore cable has been tested since it was laid down, nor is there any person of sufficient experience here to do so.

FRANCE.

The trial of Count de Montalembert, and M. Douniol, editor of the Correspondent, commenced on the 24th. The speeches of Messrs. Berryer and Dufaure, for the accused, are said to have been magnificent beyond description. The former spoke for two hours and a half, and said that the prosecution was "unjust, unfounded, ill-advised, and, he would add, rash." When he concluded, a tremendous shout of "bravo" burst from the lower end of the Court. The President ordered the police to turn out any one they could find who had cried out, but the police could not put their finger upon any one. The judges deliberated one hour, and pronounced the following judgment: Montalembert to be imprisoned six months, and pay a fine of 3000 francs; Douniol, one month imprisonment and 1000 francs fine.

hold the name of "Christians" as a denominational title, have a perfect right thus to do, so far as I am able to discover. But one thing [illegible] is evident, Inspiration claims no virtue for this [illegible].

But has God allowed the creatures of his footstool the privilege of choosing names to suit their own convenience and taste? In most cases he has. This privilege seemed to be granted Adam at the first. There are few exceptions to this general rule; for instance, there were certain illustrious persons whose names God would have expressive of their character,—of the work they were to accomplish,—the position they were to occupy; or indicating some peculiar phase of his professed church, as Abraham, John the Baptist, Lo-ammi, Lo-ruhama, Jesus, &c. And when God says the name must be John, it will not answer to call it Zechariah, if all the relatives do desire it. Though Zechariah was an excellent name, signifying "the memorial of Jehovah." But this will not answer for his son, that must be John; which Dr. Clarke says, "should always be written Jehovah chanan," meaning, "the grace, gift, or mercy of Jehovah." How significant of the great work he was to perform, to prepare the way for the Savior of lost man!

But the instances are very rare where Jehovah ever interferes with names. This prerogative generally belongs to man. Of course God has no need of names. He can comprehend every thing, from the least to the greatest, equally without a name as with. But we are the poor, weak creatures that stand in need of names; therefore God allows us to give names that we can comprehend, and that will designate the different things of which we may desire to speak. Every nation has a different name for a Supreme Being, but each alike intelligent to our Creator; and the same may be said of all other names.

When God built the first man out of the dust of the earth, he gave him a very appropriate name, one that was not very significant of Divinity, or that was calculated to elate him. It was "red earth!" or in English, Adam, which means "red earth." And when a companion was formed for him, God called them both Adam; that is, red earth. But the man for convenience gave another name to his wife. But did God consider it an infringement upon his order, because he called his wife Eve? Nay, verily. Though he could comprehend and designate between two bearing the same name, it would be a convenience for them to have this addition. So with God's children. He well knows who are his, and recognizes such as belonging to his church. But think you he will consider it a violation of his order when we adopt a name expressive of our faith, especially when that faith is so peculiar as to differ from most of the professed churches of God? It does appear to me we should glorify God in this period of the world's history to do so.

It is well known that very few of the so-called evangelical churches, as a body, preach, pray, or sing, about the personal Second Advent of Jesus Christ. Indeed, many of said churches discard the doctrine altogether—a doctrine on which hangs all the christian's hope of future life and glory. Now that there exists a little company who so love this event that they feel inclined to obey the divine injunction, to actually haste unto the coming of the Lord, what denominational name shall they bear for convenience sake among men? Shall it not be something expressive of that doctrine which has made them thus peculiar—a gazing stock to the world, etc.? As many, if not most of the religious sects ignore the personal second advent of Christ, would it not be proper for us to show, by our very name as well as nature, we consider it the crowning point of the gospel hope? Looking and waiting for Jesus has identified us before the world as a peculiar people; and for one I am willing to stand before the world an acknowledged believer in the second advent of Jesus Christ. Though the world, and many that profess to be separate from the world, have made the waiting for Jesus very unpopular, I do not feel ashamed of my real name. I am truly waiting for Jesus' second advent; and why is not the name that expresses this faith appropriate? We see the Scriptures are by no means imperative in this matter. But if we must be particular to the letter for a New Testament name, which one shall we take? There are quite a number of them. The Master usually called his followers "Disciples;" and once or twice as a "Church." Afterward the inspired apostles called them "Believers"—"Church of God"—"Church of Christ," and somebody called them "Christians."

Now, Brn. and Srs., if we take a New Testament name, which shall we take? If the Master had desired us to hear one of these names, would he not have told us which?

BEULAH MATHEWSON.

Bakerville, Ct., Dec., 1858.

For the Crisis.

Advent Itinerancy.

BRO. GRANT:—I send you a few more thoughts upon this subject; for as long as the Gospel dispensation lasts, it will be necessary for the ministers of Christ to travel over hill and dale, through heat and cold and storms, to feed the sheep and lambs, and hunt up those who are wandering, and bring them back to the fold. But how are they to be sustained in their labors of love? Many who reap spiritual things from this self-denying labor, are very loth to sow even carnal things. In some instances, whole congregations have been so wonderfully blessed by the ministrations of some of the servants of God, that they have wholly forgotten that the minister had aught of his own depending upon him for life's sustenance. This negligence in contributing may be justifiable when the preacher has a salary, or is employed by an association where he is sure of receiving a compensation; but when it is known that a man leaves his home and all its comforts, and undergoes all the perplexities incident to a traveling preacher, who is obliged to throw himself and family upon the mercy of those for whom this sacrifice is made, after receiving the benefits of his visit, to send him off with a mere God bless you, and come again soon, is wholly unchristian. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and the duty of supporting the minister of the Gospel is just as imperative as any other.

No doubt one great cause of deficiency amongst us is the want of a systematic plan for raising funds for the maintenance of the Gospel. In the Apostolic age, St. Paul exhorted his brethren to lay by them in store weekly, as God had prospered them, that there be no gatherings when he came; and the adoption of this plan at the present time, would save the laborers in the Lord's vineyard much embarrassment.

I believe in a systematic organization for the maintenance of the ordinances of the Gospel; not a cumbersome code of bylaws and creeds and resolutions and preambles; but a few scriptural commands and admonitions embodied as the form of a covenant, is sufficient for the true child of God. This has been adopted in many places, and its beneficial results have proved its importance. The following is from the memorandum of one of those who are engaged in this missionary work.

"Started out on a three week's mission. Travelled 116 miles to get to an appointment. Stopped on the way. Walked six miles, preached twice, and got an earnest request to come again soon, but not one cent to pay expenses. Attended several other meetings with the same result. Went on to my appointment, which was 2 1-2 miles from the depot. Started on foot, carrying a heavy valise—blistered my feet—was a little tried—thought some of the brethren who had horses and carriages idle, ought to find conveyance to and from the railroad. Got to the place—found a good home and a pleasant family. At meeting God attended the word. Seven rose for prayers, and brethren abundantly blessed. Next morning started for the depot on foot. Soon it began to rain, got a little wet, but arrived at the depot in season for the train. By this time I had been out four days, and paid out more than I had received. A brother present thought if the other two weeks would be as profitable as this, he did not wonder there were no more engaged in this kind of labor; and that no one, unless God really required it of them, would endure these privations."

What an awful account some will have to settle in the judgment court for negligence of duties. While some are sacrificing the comforts of home for the salvation of souls, others are having a large salary, and doing nothing comparatively for Christ. The weeping day is at hand when God will put righteousness to the line and justice to the plummet.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Rutland, Vt., Nov. 6th, Sr. ELIZA CLARK, wife of Harman Clark, aged 61 years.

Sr. Clark has been a consistent christian for twenty five years. She first united with the Christian church in Shrewsbury, and afterwards associated with the Baptist Church in Rutland, with the privilege of communing with all christians. When she heard the Savior was soon coming, and that the only hope of a future life is in the resurrection of the dead at the coming of Christ, she embraced this hope with joy, and died triumphantly in this faith, believing she should sleep but a short time. When first told she must soon die, she exclaimed, "Bless the Lord." Her last exhortations to the family and friends were of the most faithful nature. She ever loved holy conversation, and, for the last year, had been an active member of the "Christian Advent Church," in Rutland, which has lost a faithful member, whose example will be remembered with pleasure and imitated with profit. The funeral was attended by Eld. L. Howard.—[ED.

Died, in Brimfield, Mass., Oct. 23d, ALVIN E. AINSWORTH, son of Bro. J. E. and Sister Ainsworth, aged 19 years.

The subject of this notice was industrious, well beloved, and obedient to his parents, rare qualities in this degenerate age. Our afflicted brother and sister request the prayers of the church for grace to sustain them in this time of deep sorrow.

"How long shall death the tyrant reign?" "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." "HE will swallow up death in victory, and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces." Isa. 25: 8. Discourse, by request, from Ps. 25: 17.—"The troubles of my heart are enlarged: O bring thou me out of my distresses!"

H. PRATT.

Farewell, dear child! I bid adieu,
How deep the anguish of the heart!
Our loss is great—we weep for you—
Yet God can heal the painful smart.

We miss thee here in every place,
Thy voice no more we hear:
Silent thou sleep'st in death's embrace,
Nor knowest joy nor fear.

Our thoughts will linger round the spot,
Our tears bedew thy lonely bed;
With feelings ne'er to be forgot,
We oft will weep around thy head.

Thy parents oft with flowing tears,
And brothers round thy grave will stand;
Thy brothers, too, in after years
Will weep thy loss in this drear land."

Died, in Somerville, Mass., on the 8th day of the present month, our beloved and respected Sister PRESCOTT DICKINSON, aged 62 years and 8 months.

Her fatal disease was hemorrhage of the lungs. Our sister had been more or less feeble for several years, and a large part of the time confined to the house, but no serious apprehensions were entertained by the family of immediate decease, and therefore the stroke fell upon them very suddenly.

Sister Dickinson was, in the full sense of the word, a christian. She had been a professor of religion for many years, and had adorned that profession with a "well ordered life and godly conversation." She was a mother in Israel" truly, as many of us in the ministry can testify who have made her home our home, and have been entertained with her kind hospitalities and holy conversation. She was a firm believer in the doctrine of immortality through Jesus Christ alone, to be given at his personal appearing.

Sister D. has left a kind husband and several lovely and loving children to mourn her loss. May the blessing of the Lord rest on them, and bring them finally, with wife and mother, to the land of rest and glory.

The funeral was attended on Saturday the 11th, at 2 P. M., by a large number of sympathising friends. Services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Averill and the writer.

E. BURNHAM.

Boston, Dec 13th, 1858.

Died, in Roxbury, Mass., Nov. 28th, 1858, of brain fever, CAROLINE, wife of Andrew J. Maglue, aged 25 years.

Sr. M. was a great sufferer; but she rests where trouble never enters. She was a member of the church in this place for some years, and is the first upon whom death has laid his cold and icy hand. The Lord has sorely afflicted us, but his will be done. She is gone, and we shall see her no more until the trumpet sounds and the dead in Christ shall rise to immortality. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn her loss. This church deeply sympathise with her bereaved companion in his affliction. The hope of soon meeting her in that land where death never enters has sustained him thus far, and our earnest prayer is it may continue to do so until the end. May God grant for his dear Son's sake, that this severe affliction may be sanctified to the husband and mourning friends of our beloved sister, and bring them finally to unite with her around his throne, and sing praises to him forever. Funeral discourse by Eld. H. F. Carpenter.

For the Crisis.

Foreign News.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.

Steamship Persia, Judkins, from Liverpool Nov. 27, arrived at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

The Daily News denies that Lord Napier has been in any way censured or superseded, and understands that he has been promoted Minister Plenipotentiary to Berlin, vice Lord Bloomfield, who retires on pension.

It is considered certain that the Great Eastern will be ready for her first trip to Portland by midsummer next.

The London Times, in response to the defense by the American Press of Commissioner Reed, reiterates its charges against him, and says that a comparison of the English treaty, which obtains everything, with the American treaty, which obtains nothing, is all that is necessary to prove its assertion. The same journal has a satirical article on the proposition alleged to be in contemplation at Washington to place a tax on tea, drawing attention to the manner in which a like proposition was treated at Boston in 1773. An American self-imposed tea tax certainly teaches one lesson, and that is, that it is not a bad government, so much as a meddling, domineering government, that alienates the members of a free State.

The Tralee Chronicle publishes the following letter from Valentia, dated Nov. 21:—Nothing of importance occurred since my last, until Friday, when the weather was so fine that no further pretext could be advanced for not proceeding with the laying down of the shore end of the cable. The vessels accordingly proceeded to sea, and succeeded in submerging the few miles of shore cable, and making a splice with the deep sea portion, about five miles off Douglas Head. This operation was easily performed, and it is much to be regretted that the remaining seven miles of shore cable left at Greenwich, was not brought here and added to the part now laid down. Had this been done, there is no doubt but the result would be satisfactory. This is more evident from the fact that after passing the spot where the shore end terminates, some of the men, in their anxiety to continue the underrunning of the small cable, discovered a kink, leaving the conducting wire exposed to the water, and therefore injuring to some extent the conducting power of the wire. The defective part was immediately cut out, but the underrunning was discontinued, though it is probable that other defects of the kind would have been discovered had they proceeded. This cannot be said to be giving the present cable a fair trial. I am not aware that the shore cable has been tested since it was laid down, nor is there any person of sufficient experience here to do so.

FRANCE.

The trial of Count de Montalembert, and M. Douedil, editor of the Correspondent, commenced on the 24th. The speeches of Messrs. Berryer and Dufaure, for the accused, are said to have been magnificent beyond description. The former spoke for two hours and a half, and said that the prosecution was "unjust, unfounded, ill-advised, and, he would add, rash." When he concluded, a tremendous shout of "bravo" burst from the lower end of the Court. The President ordered the police to turn out any one they could find who had cried out, but the police could not put their finger upon any one. The judges deliberated one hour, and pronounced the following judgment: Montalembert to be imprisoned six months, and pay a fine of 3000 francs; Douedil, one month imprisonment and 1000 francs fine.

WE ARE VOYAGERS.

Air—Nelly Gray.

We are voyagers on an ocean, and our destiny we know,
For our chart it has pointed out the way;
Our Leader, too, is cheering us as o'er the waves we go,
Saying, courage, sailor, soon we'll gain the day.

CHORUS.

Then we'll watch and we'll pray,
As our vessel bears away,
And we ne'er will be disheartened any more;
For the port is getting nearer,
And I hear the Leader say—
We soon shall reach the harbor and the shore.

Though hard the winds are blowing, and high the billows roll,
'Twill only make us sigh for land the more;
And our rest will be the sweeter when we reach the final goal,
And shout our voyage is over on the shore.
CHO. Then we'll watch, &c.

We have passed the coast of Babylon and the Medo-Persian light,
And we've left the coast of Grecia far behind;
We've been sailing down the Roman shore for eighteen hundred years,
And the chart declares the port we soon shall find.
CHO. Then we'll watch, &c.

For the Crisis.

"What is Truth?"

JOHN 18 : 38.

This important question is one in which all who are seeking for eternal life are deeply interested; and those propounding it should not, like Pilate, go away without receiving an answer equal in positive evidence to the momentous interrogation.

Many put the query in the same manner as did the governor of Jerusalem, with a sneering indifference, as if its existence were a myth; but to us it is the "pearl of great price," inasmuch as we are to be "sanctified through the truth." Nor are we left in ignorance where this inestimable treasure is to be found, for it is declared, "Thy word is truth."

A careful investigation of the divine oracles will not fail to satisfy the candid mind as to the eternal, life-giving power of God's most precious truth; therefore it is of the utmost importance that we should receive it into willing, loving and obedient hearts. Its grand efficacy, being mixed with faith in them that hear it, is the power of God to their salvation. Neither is it without power to those who receive it not. It is the power of God laden with dark sentences of wrath and fiery indignation.

It was an action worthy the Son of God to come down from the glories of heaven to bear witness to the truth, and to seal the testimony with his blood. He that "spake as never man spake," appealed continually to the truth, and by its power put to silence the reasoning of men and devils. To the supercilious pharisees and scribes, who prided themselves upon their knowledge of, and adherence to, the law and the prophets, he said; "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."

I am astonished to think that so many men of intelligent minds will contend that there is not in the word of God sufficient evidence to convince them of its divine origin. It is not to opinions I would invite your attention, but facts; and the determined sceptic must have a dreadful struggle in combatting the overwhelming evidence of God's power. Look at the achievements of the divine truth, and say, is its influence a dead power? See the sick made whole, the lame to walk, the blind to see, the lepers are cleansed and the dead are raised, by Him and through Him who declared himself "The way, the truth and the life."

Again, see men, once ignorant of all languages save their own, speaking in that of every nation under heaven. The scarcely less wonder of the timid despising all fear. The unlearned made wise in the mysteries of things human and divine; putting to the blush the philosopher, awing the proud, enlightening the darkened, in the royal courts, [illegible] multitudes, and in the captive's dungeon, armed with an [illegible] spirit of wisdom, reason and truth, [illegible] confounded their adversaries. [illegible] greater wonder of the mind renewed by a knowledge of the truth. The [illegible] rise. The cruel, [illegible] the godless, are [illegible] into merciful, confiding, bountiful and faithful worshipers of the true God. The pagan hurls to the ground his hideous idols, overthrows their blood-stained altars, and bows himself in holy reverence at the footstool of Christ. Those fierce passions, which defied philosophy, laughed at tribunals, scorning alike terrors and rewards, have been vanquished by the almighty power of truth. Who shall deny that the power of God was here!

With such evidence of the power of truth before us, we who are the servants of the Most High may contemplate without fear the effects which spiritualists and other children of the Adversary are making to subvert all order and decency in the furtherance of their abominations.

Notwithstanding the furious persecutions which have swept over Christ and his church, from the manger in which reposed the infant Jesus down to the present, the truth has prevailed; although at times its enemies rejoiced at its apparent extinction; yet struggling through floods and mountains, and fire and blood, it shows its bright crest more dazzlingly than when lost sight of. We look at Christ when but a youth disputing with and confounding the doctors of the Sanhedrim. Then when his ministry begins, it is not under the patronage of the mighty of the earth, nor are his followers those of learning. He chooses a few poor, [illegible] and unlettered fisherman, and takes the field against the enemy. The hydra persecution is let loose upon them, and nails the Immaculate to the cross. But death cannot long hold the royal captive—the victim becomes the vanquisher. "Three days and I shall rise again." His word is truth. He arose and ascended to his Father. One by one his disciples dropped into their martyr graves, leaving behind them those seeds of truth which never can be uprooted.

After a review of the past, I would ask, what has truth to fear? What power will prevail against it? None. We who have tasted the sweets of Bible knowledge, know which is stronger, truth or error. Let us, therefore, have it for sword and buckler. Let it be written upon our banner, and on the frontlets between our eyes, and let it be in our hearts "a well of water springing up into eternal life."

M. COTTON.

Boston, Dec. 7th, 1858.

For the Crisis.

Work while the Day Lasts.

As time is fast rolling us on to the judgment, let us work while the day lasts; for we know not but these are the last opportunities we may have of speaking for Jesus, who bled and died for us. Oh, how earnestly should we pray for more holiness of heart, and grace to overcome in these trying times. I feel that this is truly a time when God's children are to be tried and made white, having washed their robes in the blood which cleanseth from all sin, that they may be worthy to enter the marriage supper of the Lamb. But, cheering thought, we shall soon be where there are no more trials or temptations to trouble the weary saint. How blessed the hope of the child of God! It sends a thrill of gladness through my heart to think that we are soon to meet with all the ransomed ones of earth. How sweet will be the rest of the weary, way-worn pilgrims, who have long been cross bearers, when redeemed from this world of sorrow and sadness; when they shall find a home in the earth restored to its Eden-like beauty; then will the king take the throne of his father David and reign forever triumphant over his enemies.

Sinner, would you be there to join in the songs of praise around the glorious throne? Would you be an heir to eternal life in that city whose streets are paved with gold? Then leave this vain world, and seek for nobler joys that will not fade away.

I long to be there. Gladly will I welcome sorrow here that I may have joy there. I can see my beloved friends laid away 'neath the green turf or the ocean wave, for I know when the Savior comes the graves will be opened, and we shall see our loved ones rise, never more to be touched by the icy fingers of death. Oh, let us be steadfast in the faith, looking forward to that time when we shall all meet to part no more. And let us remember that if we gain the crown, we must bear the cross; if we would secure the home, we must fight for it; be overcomers, and endure to the end.

[illegible]

Can I speak in measured numbers
Of that cause I must love still,
Which has gathered many wonders,
Expletory of its skill?

Yes, I may, but oh, the weakness
Of all words to speak its worth;
Every sentiment is meekness,
Heavenly love proclaimed its birth.

'Tis the cause for which the Savior
Poured his blood in purple tide;
And though faithful to it ever,
Many in its work have died.

Many, who though scorned, derided,
By the vile and hideous band
Of the Devil's willing minions,
Valiant stood, with sword in hand,

'Till the death-blow on them rested,
And they fell as martyrs fall;
E'en their death to us has tested,
They had consecrated all.

Others live who have not counted
Life so dear, but they would feel
Pleasure, if they too were wanted,
By their blood its truths to seal.

Oh, may I like faith possessing,
At my post both stand and fall;
Not alone by lip professing,
But by life—here is my all.

For the Crisis.

Truth Lives and is Spreading.

As I travel through the country, I have the privilege of conversing with all classes, and find many candid men that express their mind freely on the doctrines of the Bible. As I see, by an Eastern paper, some are endeavoring to make capital of testimony from a loose and degraded character, concerning the destruction of the wicked, I will pen some facts that have fallen under my own observation.

I met a professor of religion, a candid, thoughtful, upright man, who took a letter from the Methodist church before he moved West to join some sister church on his arrival. He said he had never joined from this fact; his mind had undergone a change in relation to the punishment of the wicked. I asked the friend what were his views on that point? He answered, "I am not fully prepared to answer that question. Yet I am satisfied endless conscious being in misery is a fable." What are your reasons for rejecting endless torment? "I cannot harmonize it with the attributes of God as revealed in the Bible." Do you not understand the Bible teaches endless misery? "There are some texts of Scripture that seem to favor it, but I am satisfied when they are rightly understood they do not teach such an awful doctrine." Why do you call it an awful doctrine? "I call it awful because it represents the God of mercy and love as being so cruel, unmerciful and tyrannical. It furthermore places the human family in an unenviable situation. Who would dare to take the responsibility of becoming parents, and hazard the condition of their offspring burning in a lake of fire and brimstone endlessly? No one, either male or female, would dare take upon them the marriage covenant."

I remarked the people must look at it very differently, or they are very thoughtless and careless in the matter. "They are thoughtless; they do not reflect and weigh the subject; if they did think seriously on these things, one of two things would result; either the marriage institution would cease, and the earth be depopulated, or we reject this doctrine, so dishonoring to our Creator, and so inconsistent with our relation and nature, and the commands of the Bible concerning the marriage covenant."

I then referred to the Bible, teaching the destruction of the wicked, instead of their being punished in endless conscious being in misery. "I have often thought of that, and see a harmony in such a view with God's attributes, and the literal interpretation of the Bible." What do you think about preaching the destruction of the wicked, provided you should ascertain that is the Bible doctrine? "I am satisfied the minds of the people (I am speaking of the thoughtful) would be relieved on this subject. There are many like myself that are satisfied Universalism is not true, and endless misery is driving them into scepticism and infidelity."

This is one case among many that I have found in my travels West, who are rejecting the doctrine of endless misery, without even hearing a word about the wicked being destroyed, from preachers or books. One more case.

I was preaching in a certain place; had given a number of discourses in connection with the inquiry, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" At the close of one discourse, after I had canvassed the subject somewhat thoroughly, a gentleman came and spoke to me on this wise: "I have been convinced for some time past that the destruction of the wicked is the doctrine of the Bible. But you are the first man I ever heard preach it. I will tell you how I was converted. When I lived in an eastern State, I heard a preacher undertake to describe the endless torment of the wicked. He had carried man along through life, in a course of opposition to God, and from death into hell—a lake of fire and brimstone. This lake he (preacher) described as rolling like the ocean waves. The sinner was placed in this liquid lake. He was rolled beneath the fiery wave and gone some thousands of years; as he came to the surface he raised both hands, while fire was streaming off his fingers, down his arms and head. He cried, 'Gabriel! Gabriel! how long must I remain in this awful lake of fire?' 'Forever!' was the answer, in a shrill tone. The next wave buried him, and he sank. Ages passed, and the wicked creature returned and again cried to Gabriel, with his hands uplifted as formerly, 'O Gabriel, do tell me how long I must remain in this unquenchable fire!' The angel answers him in a stern and solemn tone—'Forever! there is to be no end.' Again he sank, and ages upon ages passed, and he retired, wailing and gnashing his teeth, as he raised his hands to inquire of Gabriel again, 'how long he was to remain in that terrible place!'" The gentleman remarked, the preacher repeated this blood-chilling scene some half dozen times, describing it more horribly, if possible, every time this poor sinful wretch came in sight. "From that time I began to make inquiry, What does the Bible teach? Can this that I have heard be the condition of the impenitent? On searching the Scriptures, I found they taught the destruction of the wicked. Hence I embraced the doctrine, and have had no doubt since what the portion of the wicked will be."

By inquiring further, I found he was a preacher. I then asked him if he ever preached it? "I have talked it privately, but my health not being good, and preaching only occasionally, and there being so many sectarians opposed, I thought perhaps, as I did not understand the subject perfectly, I would not introduce it publicly for fear I might not be able to make it clear, and do more hurt than good to the cause of truth." He thought he had done wrong by not preaching it, as many minds were unsettled on that question, and were favoring universal salvation.

Another man told me, a short time since, that hearing the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked saved him, as he was an Universalist.

I will say in conclusion, before any one should make capital of one individual case that has backslidden from truth and gone after the leeks and onions in Egypt, they should take a look over the land filled with drunkards, thieves, gamblers, murderers, and guilty of every crime you can mention, that were strong believers in endless misery; and question them to-day, and they will say they have rejected endless torment, and also the Bible that teaches such an outrageous doctrine.

I will give an extract from a sermon, and close for now. (May be found in Bible Ex., June, Nov., 1856.) "Why! you never heard that the doctrine of annihilation ever made a maniac in the world, while endless misery (hesitating) has made scores of them. This is one of the best evidences of its truth. The damned in hell would offer up a prayer that they might be annihilated; but for God to comply with their desire, would be showing them mercy; therefore he would not, or could not grant it." This is wonderful logic. It amounts to this. The doctrine that will make the most maniacs must be the most truthful, for its blessed effect in making maniacs "is one of the best evidences of its truth."

HOLINESS.—No gifts, no duties, no natural endowments, will evidence a right in heaven; but the least measure of true holiness will secure heaven to the soul. As holiness is the soul's best evidence for heaven, so it is a continued spring of comfort to it on the way thither. The purest and sweetest pleasures in this world are the results of holiness. Till we come to live holily, we never live comfortably. Heaven is epitomized in holiness; and, to say no more, it is the peculiar mark by which God has visibly distinguished his own, from other men—Ps. iv, 3: "The Lord hath set apart him that is godly for himself." As if he had said, this is the man, and that the woman, to whom I intend to be good for ever; this is a man for me. O holiness, how surpassingly glorious art thou!—Flavel.

For the Crisis.

"Lo here! or Lo there!"

Many have been confused with Luke 17: 20. It has been so read as to contradict every other plain and positive passage as to the reality and futurity of the Kingdom; but when read aright, it must be harmonious with them all, for the word is "not yea and nay."

"And when he was asked by the Pharisees when the Kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said; The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, Lo here! or lo there! for behold, the Kingdom of God is within you." This is what they say falsely, or are forbidden to say at all. Then He said unto the disciples (what he would have us all believe) "As the lightning . . . so shall also the Son of man be in his day. . . And as it was in the days of Noah . . . (and) in the days of Lot, . . . thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed."

This language cannot apply to the mild and gracious introduction of the Gospel by John, Jesus and the Apostles. It is not true of the operation of grace. There is no analogy between conversion and the flood on the world of the ungodly; nor between grace reigning in the heart and the fiery tempest on Sodom. No, no. The whole context is made a jumble of folly or falsehood—outraging alike both observation and experience, and leaving the devout in a mass of doubt and confusion.

In every plain text where the kingdoms are numbered, they are not contemporaneous, but successive. Four are earthly, and the "fourth" is to be followed by "the Kingdom of God." Dan., chaps. 7, 8 and 9; Zech. 1: 18–21; Luke 21: 24.

In prayer, we are taught to cry; "Thy Kingdom come," and hence, as our Lord can never be confounded, nor confound us, we know he has not made our experience of the "Kingdom in us" contradict and confound all authorized prayer, that it may yet "come" to us and the world. But allow verse 21st to be the unauthorized utterance of ignorance or unbelief—"Neither shall they say, Lo here! or lo there! Behold, the Kingdom of God is within you." Then the contrast between what "they say" and what "He said unto his disciples," is maintained boldly and undeniably.

The particle "gar," translated "for," is and must be, often rendered "besides, further, moreover, indeed, certainly," &c. See Macknight on the particles. Either of these definitions will express the idea.

The Minister and the Hams.

I had the following narrative from a most reliable source, and as near as may be, will give it in the language of the narrator:

I knew a man who, until past the meridian of life, manifested in all his transactions a mean, miserly spirit. Money was his God. He was proverbially "a mean man." Between forty and fifty years of age, he became a subject of "sovereign grace." His eyes were opened to see with great distinctness the truth of that word, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." In a word, he was truly converted. At the period of which I speak, he was a wealthy farmer, on one of our rich prairies. He united with the people of God, he confessed, and most deeply deplored the sin of covetousness. He promised, with Divine help, to "live no longer unto himself." He was sincere in his promise and his purpose. Little did the poor man know himself, the power of habit, of temptation or of the conflict before him between the "old and new man."

As was then the custom in the Methodist church in the country, and is, to some extent, at this day, the minister in charge was in the habit of receiving his dues in provisions, etc. Soon after "Old Covetous" united with the class, the minister got out of meat; so he "harnessed up," and rode over to Bro. C——'s house.

"Good morning, Bro. C——."

"Good morning; glad to see you; won't you 'light?"

"No, thank you. Wife says we are out of meat, and I thought"—

(Old man.) "Out of meat, are ye?" (New man.) "Well, I'm glad to hear it; it will do me good to supply you. Go to my smoke house, yonder, and take the best ham you can find—mind and take the biggest."

On went the preacher, and soon returned, bearing a ham weighing twenty pounds. He passed on to his wagon.

Now came the conflict.

(Old man in his heart, solus.) "You old fool! that ham weighs twenty pounds! Hams are scarce—worth one shilling per pound." (New man, solus.) "God loveth the cheerful giver." "What shall it profit a man, though he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" "O God, forgive me!" "Get thee behind me, Satan." Here, Mr., come back! come back! "Now," said he, "go again to my smoke-house, and this time get two hams. Get the very best—mind you get rousers."

Soon he returned, bearing forty pounds more of the precious meat; then came over the poor man again the spirit of covetousness.

(Old man.) "Well, I, be sure a fool! You will die in the poor-house yet! Forty, sixty pounds—worth eight dollars! Eight dollars gone slick!" (New man.) "Honor the Lord with thy substance." "Give, and it shall be given unto you. Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy; though I fall, I shall rise again." "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." Oh! I am—I am in the valley.

Poor man he was, and like Bunyan's Christian, he sheathed his sword, and cried to him who was "able and willing"—"Lord, save me."

(New man.) "Here, Mr., come back! come back!" Now his manly form trembled! The water stood in his eyes, and then like a little child, he wept and sobbed as he told his minister of the warfare within. "And now, Mr. Devil," said he, "If you don't quit this business, I'll give away every ham I've got in the smoke-house."

Then "Apollyon spread his wings and left him for a season."

The Book of Job.

The Book of Job is generally regarded as the most perfect specimen of the poetry of the Hebrews. It is alike picturesque in the delineation of individual phenomena, and artistically skillful in the didactic arrangement of the whole work. In all the modern languages into which the Book of Job has been translated, its images, drawn from the natural scenery of the East, leaves a deep impression on the mind. "The Lord walketh on the heights of the waters, on the ridges of the wave, towering high beneath the force of the wind." "The morning red has colored the margin of the earth, and variously formed the covering of the clouds, as the hand of man holds the yielding clay." The habits of animals are described, as, for instance, those of the wild ass, the horse, the buffalo, the rhinoceros, and the crocodile, the eagle and the ostrich. We see "the pure ether spread, during the heat of the south wind, as a melted mirror over the parched desert."

The poetic literature of the Hebrews is not deficient in variety of form; for while the Hebrew poetry breathes a warlike enthusiasm, from Joshua to Samuel, the little book of the gleaner, Ruth, presents us with a charming and exquisite picture of nature. Goethe, at the period of his enthusiasm for the East, spoke of it "as the loveliest specimen of epic and idyl poetry which we possess."—Humboldt's Cosmos, vol ii., p. 60.

"What is Truth?"

JOHN 18 : 38.

This important question is one in which all who are seeking for eternal life are deeply interested; and those propounding it should not, like Pilate, go away without receiving an answer equal in positive evidence to the momentous interrogation.

Many put the query in the same manner as did the governor of Jerusalem, with a sneering indifference, as if its existence were a myth; but to us it is the "pearl of great price," inasmuch as we are to be "sanctified through the truth." Nor are we left in ignorance where this inestimable treasure is to be found, for it is declared, "Thy word is truth."

A careful investigation of the divine oracles will not fail to satisfy the candid mind as to the eternal, life-giving power of God's most precious truth; therefore it is of the utmost importance that we should receive it into willing, loving and obedient hearts. Its grand efficacy, being mixed with faith in them that hear it, is the power of God to their salvation. Neither is it without power to those who receive it not. It is the power of God laden with dark sentences of wrath and fiery indignation.

It was an action worthy the Son of God to come down from the glories of heaven to bear witness to the truth, and to seal the testimony with his blood. He that "spake as never man spake," appealed continually to the truth, and by its power put to silence the reasoning of men and devils. To the supercilious pharisees and scribes, who prided themselves upon their knowledge of, and adherence to, the law and the prophets, he said; "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."

I am astonished to think that so many men of intelligent minds will contend that there is not in the word of God sufficient evidence to convince them of its divine origin. It is not to opinions I would invite your attention, but facts; and the determined sceptic must have a dreadful struggle in combatting the overwhelming evidence of God's power. Look at the achievements of the divine truth, and say, is its influence a dead power? See the sick made whole, the lame to walk, the blind to see, the lepers are cleansed and the dead are raised, by Him and through Him who declared himself "The way, the truth and the life."

Again, see men, once ignorant of all languages save their own, speaking in that of every nation under heaven. The scarcely less wonder of the timid despising all fear. The unlearned made wise in the mysteries of things human and divine, putting to the blush the philosopher, awing the proud, enlightening the darkened, in the royal [illegible] mighty multitudes, and in the [illegible] dungeon, armed with an [illegible] of wisdom, reason and [illegible] confounded their adversaries. [illegible] of the mind [illegible] knowledge of the truth. The [illegible]. The royal [illegible] merciful, confiding, bountiful and faithful worshipers of the true God. The pagan hurls to the ground his hideous idols, overthrows their blood-stained altars, and bows himself in holy reverence at the footstool of Christ! Those fierce zealots, which defied philosophy, laughed at tribunals, scorning alike terrors and rewards, have been vanquished by the almighty power of truth. Who shall deny that the power of God was here!

With such evidence of the power of truth before us, we who are the servants of the Most High may contemplate without fear the effects which spiritualists and other children of the Adversary are making to subvert all order and decency in the furtherance of their abominations.

Notwithstanding the furious persecutions which have swept over Christ and his church, from the manger in which reposed the infant Jesus down to the present, the truth has prevailed; although at times its enemies rejoiced at its apparent extinction; yet struggling through floods and mountains, and fire and blood, it shows its bright crest more dazzlingly than when lost sight of. We look at Christ when but a youth disputing with and confounding the doctors of the Sanhedrim. Then when his ministry begins, it is not under the patronage of the mighty of the earth, nor are his followers those of learning. He chooses a few [illegible] and unlettered fisherman, and takes the field against the enemy. The hydra persecution is let loose upon them, and nails the Immaculate to the cross. But death cannot long hold the royal captive—the victim becomes the vanquisher. "Three days and I shall rise again." His word is truth. He arose and ascended to his Father. One by one his disciples dropped into their martyr graves, leaving behind them those seeds of truth which never can be uprooted.

After a review of the past, I would ask, what has truth to fear? What power will prevail against it? None. We who have tasted the sweets of Bible knowledge, know which is stronger, truth or error. Let us, therefore, have it for sword and buckler. Let it be written upon our banner, and on the frontlets between our eyes, and let it be in our hearts "a well of water springing up into eternal life."

For the Crisis.

Work while the Day Lasts.

As time is fast rolling us on to the judgment, let us work while the day lasts; for we know not but these are the last opportunities we may have of speaking for Jesus, who bled and died for us. Oh, how earnestly should we pray for more holiness of heart, and grace to overcome in these trying times. I feel that this is truly a time when God's children are to be tried and made white, having washed their robes in the blood which cleanseth from all sin, that they may be worthy to enter the marriage supper of the Lamb. But, cheering thought, we shall soon be where there are no more trials or temptations to trouble the weary saint. How blessed the hope of the child of God! It sends a thrill of gladness through my heart to think that we are soon to meet with all the ransomed ones of earth. How sweet will be the rest of the weary, wayworn pilgrims, who have long been cross bearers, when redeemed from this world of sorrow and sadness; when they shall find a home in the earth restored to its Eden-like beauty; then will the king take the throne of his father David and reign forever triumphant over his enemies.

Sinner, would you be there to join in the songs of praise around the glorious throne? Would you be an heir to eternal life in that city whose streets are paved with gold? Then leave this vain world, and seek for nobler joys that will not fade away.

I long to be there. Gladly will I welcome sorrow here that I may have joy there. I can see my beloved friends laid away 'neath the green turf or the ocean wave, for I know when the Savior comes the graves will be opened, and we shall see our loved ones rise, never more to be touched by the icy fingers of death. Oh, let us be steadfast in the faith, looking forward to that time when we shall all meet to part no more. And let us remember that if we gain the crown, we must bear the cross; if we would secure the home, we must fight for it; be overcomers, and endure to the end.

Many, who though scorned, derided,
By the vile and hideous band
Of the Devil's willing minions,
Valiant stood, with sword in hand,

Till the death-blow on them rested,
And they fell as martyrs fall;
E'en their death to us has tested,
They had consecrated all.

Life so dear, but they would feel
Pleasure, if they too were wanted,
By their blood its truths to seal.

Not alone by lip professing,
But by life—here is my all.

For the Crisis.

Truth Lives and is Spreading.

As I travel through the country, I have the privilege of conversing with all classes, and find many candid men that express their mind freely on the doctrines of the Bible. As I see, by an Eastern paper, some are endeavoring to make capital of testimony from a loose and degraded character, concerning the destruction of the wicked, I will pen some facts that have fallen under my own observation.

I met a professor of religion, a candid, thoughtful, upright man, who took a letter from the Methodist church before he moved West to join some sister church on his arrival. He said he had never joined from this fact; his mind had undergone a change in relation to the punishment of the wicked. I asked the friend what were his views on that point? He answered, "I am not fully prepared to answer that question. Yet I am satisfied endless conscious being in misery is a fable." What are your reasons for rejecting endless torment? "I cannot harmonize it with the attributes of God as revealed in the Bible." Do you not understand the Bible teaches endless misery? "There are some texts of Scripture that seem to favor it, but I am satisfied when they are rightly understood they do not teach such an awful doctrine." Why do you call it an awful doctrine? "I call it awful because it represents the God of mercy and love as being so cruel, unmerciful and tyrannical. It furthermore places the human family in an unenviable situation. Who would dare to take the responsibility of becoming parents, and hazard the condition of their offspring burning in a lake of fire and brimstone endlessly? No one, either male or female, would dare take upon them the marriage covenant."

I remarked the people must look at it very differently, or they are very thoughtless and careless in the matter. "They are thoughtless; they do not reflect and weigh the subject; if they did think seriously on these things, one of two things would result; either the marriage institution would cease, and the earth be depopulated, or we reject this doctrine, so dishonoring to our Creator, and so inconsistent with our relation and nature, and the commands of the Bible concerning the marriage covenant."

I then referred to the Bible, teaching the destruction of the wicked, instead of their being punished in endless conscious being in misery. "I have often thought of that, and see a harmony in such a view with God's attributes, and the literal interpretation of the Bible." What do you think about preaching the destruction of the wicked, provided you should ascertain that is the Bible doctrine? "I am satisfied the minds of the people (I am speaking of the thoughtful) would be relieved on this subject. There are many like myself that are satisfied Universalism is not true, and endless misery is driving them into scepticism and infidelity."

This is one case among many that I have found in my travels West, who are rejecting the doctrine of endless misery, without even hearing a word about the wicked being destroyed, from preachers or books. One more case.

I was preaching in a certain place; had given a number of discourses in connection with the inquiry, "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" At the close of one discourse, after I had canvassed the subject somewhat [illegible], a gentleman came and spoke to me on this wise: "I have been convinced for some time past that the destruction of the wicked is the doctrine of the Bible. But you are the first man I ever heard preach it. I will tell you how I was converted. When I lived in an eastern State, I heard a preacher undertake to describe the endless torment of the wicked. He had carried man along through life, in a course of opposition to God, and from death into hell—a lake of fire and brimstone. This lake he (preacher) described as rolling like the ocean waves. The sinner was placed in this liquid lake. He was rolled beneath the fiery wave and gone some thousands of years; as he came to the surface he raised both hands, while fire was streaming off his fingers, down his arms and head. He cried, 'Gabriel! Gabriel! how long must I remain in this awful lake of fire?' 'Forever!' was the answer, in a shrill tone. The next wave buried him, and he sank. Ages passed, and the wicked creature returned and again cried to Gabriel, with his hands uplifted as formerly, 'O Gabriel, do tell me how long I must remain in this unquenchable fire!' The angel answers him in a stern and solemn tone—'Forever! there is to be no end.' Again he sank, and ages upon ages passed, and he retired, wailing and gnashing his teeth, as he raised his hands to inquire of Gabriel again, 'how long he was to remain in that terrible place!'" The gentleman remarked, the preacher repeated this blood-chilling scene some half dozen times, describing it more horribly, if possible, every time this poor sinful wretch came in sight. "From that time I began to make inquiry, What does the Bible teach? Can this that I have heard be the condition of the impenitent? On searching the Scriptures, I found they taught the destruction of the wicked. Hence I embraced the doctrine, and have had no doubt since what the portion of the wicked will be."

By inquiring further, I found he was a preacher. I then asked him if he ever preached it? "I have talked it privately, but my health not being good, and preaching only occasionally, and there being so many sectarians opposed, I thought perhaps, as I did not understand the subject perfectly, I would not introduce it publicly for fear I might not be able to make it clear, and do more hurt than good to the cause of truth." He thought he had done wrong by not preaching it, as many minds were unsettled on that question, and were favoring universal salvation.

Another man told me, a short time since, that hearing the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked saved him, as he was an Universalist.

I will say in conclusion, before any one should make capital of one individual case that has backslidden from truth and gone after the leeks and onions in Egypt, they should take a look over the land filled with drunkards, thieves, gamblers, murderers, and guilty of every crime you can mention, that were strong believers in endless misery; and question them to-day, and they will say they have rejected endless torment, and also the Bible that teaches such an outrageous doctrine.

I will give an extract from a sermon, and close for now. (May be found in Bible Ex., June, Nov., 1856.) "Why! you never heard that the doctrine of annihilation ever made a maniac in the world, while endless misery (hesitating) has made scores of them. This is one of the best evidences of its truth. The damned in hell would offer up a prayer that they might be annihilated; but for God to comply with their desire, would be showing them mercy; therefore he would not, or could not grant it." This is wonderful logic. It amounts to this. The doctrine that will make the most maniacs must be the most truthful, for its blessed effect in making maniacs "is one of the best evidences of its truth."

HOLINESS.—No gifts, no duties, no natural endowments, will evidence a right in heaven; but the least measure of true holiness will secure heaven to the soul. As holiness is the soul's best evidence for heaven, so it is a continued spring of comfort to it on the way thither. The purest and sweetest pleasures in this world are the results of holiness. Till we come to live holily, we never live comfortably. Heaven is epitomized in holiness; and, to say no more, it is the peculiar mark by which God has visibly distinguished his own from other men—Ps. iv. 3: "The Lord hath set apart him that is godly for himself." As if he had said, this is the man, and that the woman, to whom I intend to be good for ever; this is a man for me! O holiness, how surpassingly glorious art thou!—Flavel.

For the Crisis.

"Lo here! or Lo there!"

Many have been confused with Luke 17: 20. It has been so read as to contradict every other plain and positive passage as to the reality and futurity of the Kingdom; but when read aright, it must be harmonious with them all, for the word is "not yea and nay."

"And when he was asked by the Pharisees when the Kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said; The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, Lo here! or lo there! for behold, the Kingdom of God is within you." This is what they say falsely, or are forbidden to say at all. Then He said unto the disciples (what he would have us all believe) "As the lightning . . . so shall also the Son of man be in his day. . . And as it was in the days of Noah . . . (and) in the days of Lot, . . . thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed."

This language cannot apply to the mild and gracious introduction of the Gospel by John, Jesus and the Apostles. It is not true of the operation of grace. There is no analogy between conversion and the flood on the world of the ungodly; nor between grace reigning in the heart and the fiery tempest on Sodom. No, no. The whole context is made a jumble of folly or falsehood—outraging alike both observation and experience, and leaving the devout in a mass of doubt and confusion.

In every plain text where the kingdoms are numbered, they are not contemporaneous, but successive. Four are earthly, and the "fourth" is to be followed by "the Kingdom of God." Dan., chaps. 7, 8 and 9; Zech. 1: 18–21; Luke 21 : 24.

In prayer, we are taught to cry; "Thy Kingdom come;" and hence, as our Lord can never be confounded, nor confound us, we know he has not made our experience of the "Kingdom in us" contradict and confound all authorized prayer, that it may yet "come" to us and the world. But allow verse 21st to be the unauthorized utterance of ignorance or unbelief—"Neither shall they say, Lo here! or lo there! Behold, the Kingdom of God is within you." Then the contrast between what "they say" and what "He said unto his disciples," is maintained boldly and undeniably.

The particle "gar," translated "for," is and must be, often rendered "besides, further, moreover, indeed, certainly," &c. See Macknight on the particles. Either of these definitions will express the idea.

The Minister and the Hams.

I had the following narrative from a most reliable source, and as near as may be, will give it in the language of the narrator:

I knew a man who, until past the meridian of life, manifested in all his transactions a mean, miserly spirit. Money was his God. He was proverbially "a mean man." Between forty and fifty years of age, he became a subject of "sovereign grace." His eyes were opened to see with great distinctness the truth of that word, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." In a word, he was truly converted. At the period of which I speak, he was a wealthy farmer, on one of our rich prairies. He united with the people of God, he confessed, and most deeply deplored the sin of covetousness. He promised, with Divine help, to "live no longer unto himself." He was sincere in his promise and his purpose. Little did the poor man know himself, the power of habit, of temptation or of the conflict before him between the "old and new man."

As was then the custom in the Methodist church in the country, and is, to some extent, at this day, the minister in charge was in the habit of receiving his dues in provisions, etc. Soon after "Old Covetous" united with the class, the minister got out of meat; so he "harnessed up," and rode over to Bro. C——'s house.

"Good morning, Bro. C——."

"Good morning; glad to see you; won't you 'light?"

"No, thank you. Wife says we are out of meat, and I thought"—

(Old man.) "Out of meat, are ye?" (New man.) "Well, I'm glad to hear it; it will do me good to supply you. Go to my smoke house, yonder, and take the best ham you can find—mind and take the biggest."

On went the preacher, and soon returned, bearing a ham weighing twenty pounds. He passed on to his wagon.

Now came the conflict.

(Old man in his heart, solus.) "You old fool! that ham weighs twenty pounds! Hams are scarce—worth one shilling per pound." (New man, solus.) "God loveth the cheerful giver." "What shall it profit a man, though he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" O God, forgive me! "Get thee behind me, Satan." Here, Mr., come back! come back! "Now, said he, "go again to my smoke-house, and this time get two hams. Get the very best—mind you get rousers."

Soon he returned, bearing forty pounds more of the precious meat; then came over the poor man again the spirit of covetousness.

(Old man.) "Well, I'm a fool! You will die in the poor-house yet! Forty, sixty pounds—worth eight dollars! Eight dollars gone slick!" (New man.) "Honor the Lord with thy substance. Give, and it shall be given unto you. Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy; though I fall, I shall rise again." "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." O! I am—I am in the valley.

Poor man he was, and like Bunyan's Christian, he sheathed his sword, and cried to Him who was "able and willing"—"Lord, save me."

(New man.) "Here, Mr., come back! come back!" Now his manly form trembled! The water stood in his eyes, and then like a little child, he wept and sobbed as he told his minister of the warfare within. "And now, Mr. Devil," said he, "If you don't quit this business, I'll give away every ham I've got in the smoke-house."

Then "Apollyon spread his wings and left him for a season."

The Book of Job.

The Book of Job is generally regarded as the most perfect specimen of the poetry of the Hebrews. It is alike picturesque in the delineation of individual phenomena, and artistically skillful in the didactic arrangement of the whole work. In all the modern languages into which the Book of Job has been translated, its images, drawn from the natural scenery of the East, leaves a deep impression on the mind. "The Lord walketh on the heights of the waters, on the ridges of the wave, towering high beneath the force of the wind." "The morning red has colored the margin of the earth, and variously formed the covering of the clouds, as the hand of man holds the yielding clay." The habits of animals are described, as, for instance, those of the wild ass, the horse, the buffalo, the rhinoceros, and the crocodile, the eagle and the ostrich. We see "the pure ether spread, during the heat of the south wind, as a melted mirror over the parched desert."

The poetic literature of the Hebrews is not deficient in variety of form; for while the Hebrew poetry breathes a warlike enthusiasm, from Joshua to Samuel, the little book of the gleaner, Ruth, presents us with a charming and exquisite picture of nature. Goethe, at the period of his enthusiasm for the East, spoke of it "as the loveliest specimen of epic and idyl poetry which we possess."—Humboldt's Cosmos, vol ii., p. 60.

CHRISTMAS.

When in silence o'er the deep,
Darkness kept its deathless sleep,
Soon as God his mandate spoke,
Light in wondrous beauty broke.

But a beam of holier light
Gilded Bethlehem's lonely night,
When the glory of the Lord—
Mercy's sunlight—shone abroad.

"Peace on earth, good will to men—"
Burst the glorious anthem then;
Angels, bending from above,
Joined that strain of holy love.

Floating o'er the waves of time,
Comes to us that song sublime,
Bearing to the pilgrim's ear
Words to soothe, sustain, and cheer.

For creation's blessed light,
Praise to thee, thou God of might;
Seraph strains thy name should bless,
For the Sun of righteousness.

EXTRACT.

"Purity of motive and nobility of mind shall rarely condescend
To prove its rights, and prate of wrongs,
Or evidence its worth to others.
And it shall be small care to the high and happy conscience,
What jealous friends, or envious foes,
Or common fools may judge.
Should the Lion turn and rend every snarling jackall?
Or an eagle stop in his career
To punish the petulance of sparrows?
Should the palm tree bend his crown to chide the brier at his feet?
Nor kindly help his climbing if it hope and be ambitious?
Should the nightingale account it worth her pains to vindicate her music
Before some sorry finches that offered to judge of song?"

Queer Things.

It is queer that men should complain that a minister does n't study and does n't preach as well as they want him to do, when they know he has to work six days in the week with hand and brain to support himself and family, and is deprived of the time for improvement.

It is queer when persons invite a man to preach, and pay him nothing to support himself while doing it, that they should also find fault because he does n't preach to suit their notions.

It is queer that persons who hear a man preach about half the time to them without attempting to support or assist him temporally in so doing, should find fault and grumble because he chose to preach the rest of the time elsewhere.

It is queer that persons who have for years found fault with sectarianism, should at last become so exceedingly sectarian that they could n't even hear the gospel preached in any house of worship except their own.

It is queer that persons who have marked out their own course, and pursued it till they have run it into the ground, cannot allow anybody else to work without riding the same hobby and traveling in the same direction.

It is queer that persons believe that a man is competent to teach and preach the gospel and yet has n't common sense enough to know when, where, how and what to preach, without being dictated and directed by those who, being confessedly incompetent to do the work, merely take it upon themselves to order and direct others how it should be done.

It is queer that persons who have long since, theoretically and practically, determined that they could do nothing, should find fault with others who are in the habit of doing something, because they attempt to do something by a different process from that by which the others have been accustomed to do nothing.

An Inquiry.

WERE MOSES AND ELIAS PRESENT AT THE TRANSFIGURATION OF CHRIST?

While perusing a publication from the pen of an esteemed brother who is a powerful battle-axe in the hand of Jehovah, the above inquiry ran through my mind. The writer took the position that they were, literally, and talked with Christ. Not merely the immaterial, uncompounded immortal soul of Moses, and the body of Elias that ascended into heaven many centuries before, but that both of them were there personally. Taking it for granted that Elias (or Elijah) was there, Moses must certainly have been. He said that when "Michael the archangel" was "contending with the devil . . . about the body of Moses," (Jude 9) he had come to enter the prison of the devil, to break the fetters that bound Moses in death, and raise the dusty sleeper to conscious existence before the time came for "all that are in the graves" to "hear the voice of the Son of God" and come forth to surround the throne of the Eternal One. To this view of the subject I find several serious objections, which I cannot reconcile, and that I have never heard reconciled to my satisfaction. They are these.

1. If Moses and Elias were present and talked with Christ, why did he say to them on going down from the mountain, "tell the vision to no man till after the Son of man be risen from the dead." Matt. 17: 9. If it was a reality, and they were there, why did he say it was a "vision"? According to Webster, a vision is "something imagined to be seen." Now if it was a vision, as Jesus expressly says it was, can we suppose the reality was there? We might just as well suppose that John saw literally the "New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven," (Rev. 21: 2,) which would be inconsistent, because it was a vision. Again, he "saw the dead small and great stand before God." Rev. 20: 12. No one could think that he saw them literally, but it was a vision of what will be seen really at the final end of wickedness. So I believe the transfiguration with Moses and Elias in a vision, a representation of the coming of Christ, the resurrected saints, (for Moses died and God buried him and was represented as having had a resurrection) and the living saints that will be changed and caught up to meet him in the air. Then, the vision that was seen more than eighteen hundred years ago will be a reality, and not only will Moses and Elias be there, but all the redeemed of all ages.

2. If Moses was raised from the dead and was then with Christ, Saul was greatly mistaken when he said that Christ was "the first born from the dead." Col. 1: 18. Again, speaking of his resurrection, he said, "Now is Christ risen and become the first fruits of them that slept." 1 Cor. 15: 20. Paul must either have been greatly in the wrong, or Moses could not have been at the transfiguration; for if Christ was "the first born from the dead," then Moses was not born first, and could not have been present, as that certainly was before Christ's resurrection; for on going down from the mountain, he said, "Tell the vision to no man till the Son of man be risen from the dead." What think ye? Did Paul, the inspired apostle of Jesus Christ, who wrote as he was moved by the Holy Spirit, write a falsehood, or did he write the whole truth of the matter when he said that Jesus was "the first born from the dead"? I believe Paul told the truth, and if Christ was the "first born from the dead," then Moses could not have been there, and if Moses was not there, Elias certainly could not have been, and if they were not there, it must have been a vision, as Christ said, and the whole thing is in perfect harmony.

Faith and Good Works.—By flowers, understand faith; by fruit, good works. As the flower is before the fruit, so is faith before good works; so neither is the fruit without the flower, or good works without faith.

For the Crisis.

"A Spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have."

This assertion of the Great Teacher, Messiah, is found in Luke 24: 39. But it seems impossible that men, deluded with the dream of an immortal "inner man," as the crowning characteristic of the natural—"the old man," should exercise common sense on this point—to say nothing of faith.

Faith in God finds a correction of the prevailing false philosophy in these and other words of inspired truth. The apostles once thought that they had seen a spirit, (phantom, Matt. 14: 26,) but they were mistaken! Jesus said, "It is I." They again "thought the kingdom of God should immediately appear;" but they mistook entirely—both as to time and event—seeing that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor. 15: 50. It can only be enjoyed in resurrection life. So here the apostles in themselves are erring in their fears and feelings, like other partially good men; for they "knew in part," and did not here speak by "the Holy Ghost." "They were terrified," and supposed that they had seen a spirit! Our Lord corrected their misapprehensions; showed his hands and his feet; and told them that "a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have!" This corrects their mistake; but does not deny that as certainly as Adam was "made a living soul," so he himself was constituted "a life-working Spirit." 1 Cor. 15: 45.

But the assertion of the popular error in the late discussion among us, requires a word of correction and illustration. The story of a ghost is published in the N. Y. Post, whose body was to have been dissected; whose bones were to have been disposed of by lot, among the medical students there engaged; and who advised Dr. Redman to "draw first," saying, "I will make you draw the prize!" The lucky doctor, acting on this advice, "drew first and took the bones." But on leaving Hartford, Ct., and removing to New York, he left part of the bones; then the ghost got up a noisy demonstration about his bones! To make sure, gratify its "pride" and secure attention, like some spoiled and saucy Miss, it got other ghosts to join it and bring the absent bones from Hartford, Ct., to New York city!! The mystic "Telegraph"—the organ of mysticism—keeps its readers informed as to the progress made in bringing the bones. One "bone dropped on the sidewalk in front of the doctors;" another comes "dropping from the ceiling," &c., while Dr. Redman "recognizes it (and them) as a bone belonging to the much talked of spirit!!!" These things are recorded "in the year of grace" 1858.

One paper, the Rochester Democrat of Dec. 4th, contains a letter from Mr. Worth, a companion of Hume the marvelous mystic monger. He forgets himself and subject and tells us of the spirit raps all round the room; its pulling his beard, closing his eyes, laying its warm hand on his forehead, and then climbing up, walking over the bed and lying down on it with the weight of a child!"

Note. In all these and thousands of other facts, the notions and conditions of matter are asserted! But all these mystics assert the like things of "spirit" so "spirits," (aside from matter.) The whole is a re-assertion of the old serpent's first "lie."—John 8: 44; Gen. 3: 34. They know not either matter or spirit in the light of God. Those so deluded are certainly caught in Satan's snare.—2 Tim. 2: 26. If God or truth were in them, they would not, could not so blunder about the bones, or other attributes of matter, while speaking of spirit. The trumpet must give a certain sound—"yea and amen, to the glory of God."

True Joy.—That is the true and chief joy which is not conceived from the creature, but received from the Creator, which (being once possessed thereof) none can take from thee: whereto all pleasure, being compared, is torment, all joy is grief, sweet things are bitter, all glory is baseness, and all delectable things are despicable.—Bernard.

For the Crisis.

The Fearful Position of the Impenitent.

"Their foot shall slide in due time."—Deut. 32: 35.

This is a striking figure illustrating the fearful position of the finally impenitent in reference to future retribution. Like a person standing on a fearful declivity when their foot is liable to slide at any moment, and they fall irrecoverably to ruin and death! so the sinner is on the verge of eternity, and over the dark and dreadful abyss of "the second death;" and soon, ere he is aware, his "foot shall slide," and down—down—down to the regions of eternal darkness he shall fall to ruin and everlasting death! "Surely thou didst set them in slippery places: thou castedst them down into destruction. How are they brought into desolation, as in a moment! They are utterly consumed with terrors. As a dream when one awaketh; so, O Lord, when thou awakest, thou shalt despise their image." Ps. 73: 18–21.

A young man passing over the Franconia Notch of the White Mountains, had his foot slip, and he was carried down smooth rocks three hundred feet; and then was precipitated over a frightful precipice twenty feet on rocks below, and was taken up insensible. A young lady several years ago visiting Niagara Falls with friends, ventured on the verge of the precipice on the Canada side just below the falls, to pluck a flower that grew on the very brink. While bending over with her hand holding on to a shrub, and her friends' voices were heard entreating her to desist, the earth gave way beneath her, and all together slid, tumbling down the dreadful chasm, and her voice of wailing was lost in the roar of the cataract, and hushed in the silence of death.

Ere long the gay and the giddy in the pursuit and enjoyment of earthly pleasure, the venturesome on the rocks of error, will slide down the dread declivity of that awful abyss that is bottomless and eternal, and then their voice of "wailing and gnashing of teeth" will be hushed in the rolling billows of "the second death."—"The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away." Ps. 37: 20. "And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever." "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it. For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be a cast away?" Luke 9: 24, 25. Or, "whosoever will save his life shall lose it . . . For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Matt. 16: 25, 26. "This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20: 14, 15.

"But O, their end, their dreadful end!
Thy faithful word hath taught me so;
On slippery rocks I see them stand,
And fiery billows roll below."

O. R. Fassett.

☞ There are two things very hard; one is to take the shame of our sins to ourselves; the other is to give the glory of our services to Christ. Now, then, if I sacrifice to my own net; if I aim at my own credit or profit, and give the glory of all I do to self; then do I "sow to the flesh" and was never cast out of self, but act only from a natural conscience. But if I give the glory of all my strength and life in duty only to God; if I magnify grace in all, and can truly say in all I do, Yet not I; then am I truly cast out of self, and do what I do with a renewed conscience.—Mead's Almost Christian.

☞ Men are always prone to believe that they live among great events; to indulge their vanity and self-complacency by supposing that they are connected with important changes, and are perhaps helping them forward. Hence, every age, in its turn, has been called remarkable. But not in every age has this feeling been so universal, so strong and so operative, as in the present.

For the Crisis.

The Two-Horned Beast.—No. 6.

Before proceeding to the heading up of this power, I wish to bring in one more inspired witness, to prove that "Spiritualism" is the great agency by which the Armageddon battle is to be brought about. Also the testimony of the Rev. Edward Bickersteth concerning the "Antichrist" then and there to be developed. Isaiah, in his 8th chapter, speaks of a people that will associate together, but shall be broken in pieces. That will take counsel together, but it shall come to nought; and shows that this same people will form confederacies, and threaten those that will not join them; but enjoins the people of God to fear them not, "nor be afraid;" but to "sanctify the Lord of host himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread." He shows further that this confederacy will be at a time when his people "will look for him," (the Lord.) He shows that they will invite them "to seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter." But, says the prophet, "should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?" "How perfectly fulfilled in "modern spiritualism!" Seeking unto the dead for information—"for the living to the dead." "To the law and the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Do they speak according to "this word," which says, "Thou shalt surely die?" Just the opposite; "There is no such thing as death." Thus showing that "there is no light in them."

Again, they speak not according to "this word," when they say that "man knows more after, or in what is called, death than before." For this word says, "The dead know not any thing." And as there is not a single declaration in "this word" (the Bible) to show that the dead man, or any part of him, does know any thing, it is a fact that they do not speak according to "the law and testimony;" neither those who say that "there is about as much argument on one side as the other." See ver. 21.—"And they shall pass through it hardly bestead and hungry. (Their purpose seems almost accomplished.) And it shall come to pass, that when they shall be hungry, they shall fret themselves and curse their king and their God, and look upward. And they shall look unto the earth; and behold trouble and darkness, dimness of anguish; and they shall be driven to darkness,"—and this at "the battle of the great day." For after contrasting this darkness or dimness with a former one, and showing that it shall not be like that, he then gives the reason, 9: 5,—"For every battle of the warrior is with confused noise and garments rolled in blood; but this (this what? This battle,) shall be with burning and fuel of fire." But how do you know that it is Armageddon's battle? The next verse declares,—"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." From which we derive the following facts:

1. Men will form confederacies, associations, &c.

2. It will be at a time when some will be waiting and looking for the coming of the Lord.

3. These confederacies will be "spiritualists"—"seeking unto them that have familiar spirits"—"the living to the dead."

4. It will result in a battle which will be unlike all others, even a battle of "burning and fuel of fire."

5. The reason why it will be unlike all others is thus given: "For unto us a child is born," who, in this battle, will succeed to the government of the entire world,—a government of peace, blessed be God, for ever. How perfectly this accords with Rev. 16: 14.—Spirits of Devils working miracles, gathering the Kings of the earth and the whole world to battle. Yes, as Kossuth says, "The last battle in mankind's history."

Mr. Bickersteth, in his "Practical Guide to the Prophecies," says, on p. 114,—"The Scriptures which have been quoted from the epistles of St. John and Matt. 24: 44, seem to me to justify our viewing the name of Antichrist [illegible], or in spirit, as descriptive of the veiled and mystical opponents of Christ, and [illegible]LARLY, or in person, as descriptive of an open and avowed enemy, to be put down at the coming of our Lord. The two forms of Antichrist seem clearly set before us in 2 Thess. 2. We see there a double withholding, and a double revealing; a man of sin and a lawless one. . . . The first, the Man of Sin, I think has fully been proved to apply to Popery; the second, the Lawless One, applies to the speedily to be developed Antichrist." P. 123.—"The spirit of Antichrist is to be found working its way to its last consummation by Infidelity in Protestant as well as in Papal and Mohammedan lands. It is greatly to be feared that the infidel form of Antichrist is now the prevailing form, and that among all classes of christians."

A correspondent from Paris writes; "Instead of there being thirty-five million of Catholics in France, there is thirty-five million of infidels."

In a note on p. 123, Mr. Bickersteth says; "The Socialists, or avowed Atheists, are rapidly spreading through our own land (England) as similarly minded men are on the continent." P. 124.—"Everywhere we see an open advance in the expression of infidelity. The growth of piety will more and more call forth the enmity of Satan, and that enmity will become more marked and more vivid, till it assumes its last shape and highest [illegible]. We are also told that the ten horns have one mind, and shall give their power and strength to the beast.—(Antichrist [illegible] last form.")

The author sees, then, considerable ground for the opinion entertained by some, that there may yet take place a heading up, as it were, of the prophecies in these last days; a concentrated and combined exhibition of the apostasy of short continuance, under avowed [illegible]ITY, in a more glaring and blasphemous defiance of God, and possibly under some INDIVIDUAL PERSON, and accompanied with bitter sufferings of the church.

The author gives the following extract of a letter from the able correspondent of the Record, dated Oct. 2, 1838: "[illegible]terly in fact has the christian faith [illegible] abjured in this country, that an Editor of one of the most popular journals here, and a distinguished author, declared to me a few days ago in conversation, that he was strongly of opinion that the world was traveling to the production of a new religion, which would finally abolish christianity. CHRISTMAS.

When in silence o'er the deep,
Darkness kept its deathless sleep,
Soon as God his mandate spoke,
Light in wondrous beauty broke.

But a beam of holier light
Gilded Bethlehem's lonely night,
When the glory of the Lord—
Mercy's sunlight—shone abroad.

"Peace on earth, good will to men—"
Burst the glorious anthem then;
Angels, bending from above,
Joined that strain of holy love.

Floating o'er the waves of time,
Comes to us that song sublime,
Bearing to the pilgrim's ear
Words to soothe, sustain, and cheer.

For creation's blessed light,
Praise to thee, thou God of might;
Seraph strains thy name should bless,
For the Sun of righteousness.

EXTRACT.

"Purity of motive and nobility of mind shall rarely condescend
To prove its rights, and prate of wrongs,
Or evidence its worth to others.
And it shall be small care to the high and happy conscience,
What jealous friends, or envious foes,
Or common fools may judge.
Should the Lion turn and rend every snarling jackall?
Or an eagle stop in his career
To punish the petulance of sparrows?
Should the palm tree bend his crown to chide the brier at his feet?
Nor kindly help his climbing if it hope and be ambitious?
Should the nightingale account it worth her pains to vindicate her music
Before some sorry finches that offered to judge of song?"

Queer Things.

It is queer that men should complain that a minister does n't study and does n't preach as well as they want him to do, when they know he has to work six days in the week with hand and brain to support himself and family, and is deprived of the time for improvement.

It is queer when persons invite a man to preach, and pay him nothing to support himself while doing it, that they should also find fault because he does n't preach to suit their notions.

It is queer that persons who hear a man preach about half the time to them without attempting to support or assist him temporally in so doing, should find fault and grumble because he chose to preach the rest of the time elsewhere.

It is queer that persons who have for years found fault with sectarianism, should at last become so exceedingly sectarian that they could n't even hear the gospel preached in any house of worship except their own.

It is queer that persons who have marked out their own course, and pursued it till they have run it into the ground, cannot allow anybody else to work without riding the same hobby and traveling in the same direction.

It is queer that persons believe that a man is competent to teach and preach the gospel and yet has n't common sense enough to know when, where, how and what to preach, without being dictated and directed by those who, being confessedly incompetent to do the work, merely take it upon themselves to order and direct others how it should be done.

It is queer that persons who have long since, theoretically and practically, determined that they could do nothing, should find fault with others who are in the habit of doing something, because they attempt to do something by a different process from that by which the others have been accustomed to do nothing.

An Inquiry.

WERE MOSES AND ELIAS PRESENT AT THE TRANSFIGURATION OF CHRIST?

While perusing a publication from the pen of an esteemed brother who is a powerful battle-axe in the hand of Jehovah, the above inquiry ran through my mind. The writer took the position that they were, literally, and talked with Christ. Not merely the immaterial, uncompounded immortal soul of Moses, and the body of Elias that ascended into heaven many centuries before, but that both of them were there personally. Taking it for granted that Elias (or Elijah) was there, Moses must certainly have been. He said that when "Michael the archangel" was "contending with the devil . . . about the body of Moses," (Jude 9) he had come to enter the prison of the devil, to break the fetters that bound Moses in death, and raise the dusty sleeper to conscious existence before the time came for "all that are in the graves" to "hear the voice of the Son of God" and come forth to surround the throne of the Eternal One. To this view of the subject I find several serious objections, which I cannot reconcile, and that I have never heard reconciled to my satisfaction. They are these.

1. If Moses and Elias were present and talked with Christ, why did he say to them on going down from the mountain, "tell the vision to no man till after the Son of man be risen from the dead." Matt. 17: 9. If it was a reality, and they were there, why did he say it was a "vision"? According to Webster, a vision is "something imagined to be seen." Now if it was a vision, as Jesus expressly says it was, can we suppose the reality was there? We might just as well suppose that John saw literally the "New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven," (Rev. 21: 2,) which would be inconsistent, because it was a vision. Again, he "saw the dead small and great stand before God." Rev. 20: 12. No one could think that he saw them literally, but it was a vision of what will be seen really at the final end of wickedness. So I believe the transfiguration with Moses and Elias in a vision, a representation of the coming of Christ, the resurrected saints, (for Moses died and God buried him and was represented as having had a resurrection) and the living saints that will be changed and caught up to meet him in the air. Then, the vision that was seen more than eighteen hundred years ago will be a reality, and not only will Moses and Elias be there, but all the redeemed of all ages.

2. If Moses was raised from the dead and was then with Christ, Saul was greatly mistaken when he said that Christ was "the first born from the dead." Col. 1: 18. Again, speaking of his resurrection, he said, "Now is Christ risen and become the first fruits of them that slept." 1 Cor. 15: 20. Paul must either have been greatly in the wrong, or Moses could not have been at the transfiguration; for if Christ was "the first born from the dead," then Moses was not born first, and could not have been present, as that certainly was before Christ's resurrection; for on going down from the mountain, he said, "Tell the vision to no man till the Son of man be risen from the dead." What think ye? Did Paul, the inspired apostle of Jesus Christ, who wrote as he was moved by the Holy Spirit, write a falsehood, or did he write the whole truth of the matter when he said that Jesus was "the first born from the dead"? I believe Paul told the truth, and if Christ was the "first born from the dead," then Moses could not have been there, and if Moses was not there, Elias certainly could not have been, and if they were not there, it must have been a vision, as Christ said, and the whole thing is in perfect harmony.

Faith and Good Works.—By flowers, understand faith; by fruit, good works. As the flower is before the fruit, so is faith before good works; so neither is the fruit without the flower, or good works without faith.

For the Crisis.

"A Spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have."

This assertion of the Great Teacher, Messiah, is found in Luke 24: 39. But it seems impossible that men, deluded with the dream of an immortal "inner man," as the crowning characteristic of the natural—"the old man," should exercise common sense on this point—to say nothing of faith.

Faith in God finds a correction of the prevailing false philosophy in these and other words of inspired truth. The apostles once thought that they had seen a spirit, (phantom, Matt. 14: 26,) but they were mistaken! Jesus said, "It is I." They again "thought the kingdom of God should immediately appear;" but they mistook entirely—both as to time and event—seeing that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor. 15: 50. It can only be enjoyed in resurrection life. So here the apostles in themselves are erring in their fears and feelings, like other partially good men; for they "knew in part," and did not here speak by "the Holy Ghost." "They were terrified," and supposed that they had seen a spirit! Our Lord corrected their misapprehensions; showed his hands and his feet; and told them that "a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have!" This corrects their mistake; but does not deny that as certainly as Adam was "made a living soul," so he himself was constituted "a life-working Spirit." 1 Cor. 15: 45.

But the assertion of the popular error in the late discussion among us, requires a word of correction and illustration. The story of a ghost is published in the N. Y. Post, whose body was to have been dissected; whose bones were to have been disposed of by lot, among the medical students there engaged; and who advised Dr. Redman to "draw first," saying, "I will make you draw the prize!" The lucky doctor, acting on this advice, "drew first and took the bones." But on leaving Hartford, Ct., and removing to New York, he left part of the bones; then the ghost got up a noisy demonstration about his bones! To make sure, gratify its "pride" and secure attention, like some spoiled and saucy Miss, it got other ghosts to join it and bring the absent bones from Hartford, Ct., to New York city!! The mystic "Telegraph"—the organ of mysticism—keeps its readers informed as to the progress made in bringing the bones. One "bone dropped on the sidewalk in front of the doctors;" another comes "dropping from the ceiling," &c., while Dr. Redman "recognizes it (and them) as a bone belonging to the much talked of spirit!!!" These things are recorded "in the year of grace" 1858.

One paper, the Rochester Democrat of Dec. 4th, contains a letter from Mr. Worth, a companion of Hume the marvelous mystic monger. He forgets himself and subject and tells us of the spirit raps all round the room; its pulling his beard, closing his eyes, laying its warm hand on his forehead, and then climbing up, walking over the bed and lying down on it with the weight of a child!"

Note. In all these and thousands of other facts, the notions and conditions of matter are asserted! But all these mystics assert the like things of "spirit" or "spirits," (aside from matter.) The whole is a re-assertion of the old serpent's first "lie."—John 8: 44; Gen. 3: 34. They know not either matter or spirit in the light of God. Those so deluded are certainly caught in Satan's snare.—2 Tim. 2: 26. If God or truth were in them, they would not, could not so blunder about the bones, or other attributes of matter, while speaking of spirit. The trumpet must give a certain sound—"yea and amen, to the glory of God."

True Joy.—That is the true and chief joy which is not conceived from the creature, but received from the Creator, which (being once possessed thereof) none can take from thee: whereto all pleasure, being compared, is torment, all joy is grief, sweet things are bitter, all glory is baseness, and all delectable things are despicable.—Bernard.

The Fearful Position of the Impenitent.

"Their foot shall slide in due time."—Deut. 32: 35.

This is a striking figure illustrating the fearful position of the finally impenitent in reference to future retribution. Like a person standing on a fearful declivity when their foot is liable to slide at any moment, and they fall irrecoverably to ruin and death! so the sinner is on the verge of eternity, and over the dark and dreadful abyss of "the second death," and soon, ere he is aware, his "foot shall slide," and down—down—down to the regions of eternal darkness he shall fall to ruin and everlasting death! "Surely thou didst set them in slippery places: thou castedst them down into destruction. How are they brought into desolation, as in a moment! They are utterly consumed with terrors. As a dream when one awaketh; so, O Lord, when thou awakest, thou shalt despise their image." Ps. 73: 18–21.

A young man passing over the Franconia Notch of the White Mountains, had his foot slip, and he was carried down smooth rocks three hundred feet; and then was precipitated over a frightful precipice twenty feet on rocks below, and was taken up insensible. A young lady several years ago visiting Niagara Falls with friends, ventured on the verge of the precipice on the Canada side just below the falls, to pluck a flower that grew on the very brink. While bending over with her hand holding on to a shrub, and her friends' voices were heard entreating her to desist, the earth gave way beneath her, and all together slid, tumbling down the dreadful chasm, and her voice of wailing was lost in the roar of the cataract, and hushed in the silence of death.

Ere long the gay and the giddy in the pursuit and enjoyment of earthly pleasure, the venturesome on the rocks of error, will slide down the dread declivity of that awful abyss that is bottomless and eternal, and then their voice of "wailing and gnashing of teeth" will be hushed in the rolling billows of "the second death."—"The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away." Ps. 37: 20. "And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever." "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it. For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be a cast away?" Luke 9: 24, 25. Or, "whosoever will save his life shall lose it . . . For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Matt. 16: 25, 26. "This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20: 14, 15.

"But O, their end, their dreadful end!
Thy faithful word hath taught me so;
On slippery rocks I see them stand,
And fiery billows roll below."

O. R. Fassett.

☞ There are two things very hard; one is to take the shame of our sins to ourselves; the other is to give the glory of our services to Christ. Now, then, if I sacrifice to my own net; if I aim at my own credit or profit, and give the glory of all I do to self; then do I "sow to the flesh" and was never cast out of self, but act only from a natural conscience. But if I give the glory of all my strength and life in duty only to God; if I magnify grace in all, and can truly say in all I do, Yet not I; then am I truly cast out of self, and do what I do with a renewed conscience.—Mead's Almost Christian.

☞ Men are always prone to believe that they live among great events; to indulge their vanity and self-complacency by supposing that they are connected with important changes, and are perhaps helping them forward. Hence, every age, in its turn, has been called remarkable. But not in every age has this feeling been so universal, so strong and so operative, as in the present.

The Two-Horned Beast.—No. 6.

Before proceeding to the heading up of this power, I wish to bring in one more inspired witness, to prove that "Spiritualism" is the great agency by which the Armageddon battle is to be brought about. Also the testimony of the Rev. Edward Bickersteth concerning the "Antichrist" then and there to be developed. Isaiah, in his 8th chapter, speaks of a people that will associate together, but shall be broken in pieces. That will take counsel together, but it shall come to nought; and shows that this same people will form confederacies, and threaten those that will not join them; but enjoins the people of God to fear them not, "nor be afraid;" but to "sanctify the Lord of host himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread." He shows further that this confederacy will be at a time when his people "will look for him," (the Lord.) He shows that they will invite them "to seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter." But, says the prophet, "should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead?" "How perfectly fulfilled in "modern spiritualism!" Seeking unto the dead for information—"for the living to the dead." "To the law and the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Do they speak according to "this word," which says, "Thou shalt surely die?" Just the opposite; "There is no such thing as death." Thus showing that "there is no light in them."

Again, they speak not according to "this word," when they say that "man knows more after, or in what is called, death than before." For this word says, "The dead know not any thing." And as there is not a single declaration in "this word" (the Bible) to show that the dead man, or any part of him, does know any thing, it is a fact that they do not speak according to "the law and testimony;" neither those who say that "there is about as much argument on one side as the other." See ver. 21.—"And they shall pass through it hardly bestead and hungry. (Their purpose seems almost accomplished.) And it shall come to pass, that when they shall be hungry, they shall fret themselves and curse their king and their God, and look upward. And they shall look unto the earth; and behold trouble and darkness, dimness of anguish; and they shall be driven to darkness,"—and this at "the battle of the great day." For after contrasting this darkness or dimness with a former one, and showing that it shall not be like that, he then gives the reason, 9: 5,—"For every battle of the warrior is with confused noise and garments rolled in blood; but this (this what? This battle,) shall be with burning and fuel of fire." But how do you know that it is Armageddon's battle? The next verse declares,—"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." From which we derive the following facts:

1. Men will form confederacies, associations, &c.

2. It will be at a time when some will be waiting and looking for the coming of the Lord.

3. These confederacies will be "spiritualists"—"seeking unto them that have familiar spirits"—"the living to the dead."

4. It will result in a battle which will be unlike all others, even a battle of "burning and fuel of fire."

5. The reason why it will be unlike all others is thus given: "For unto us a child is born," who, in this battle, will succeed to the government of the entire world,—a government of peace, blessed be God, forever. How perfectly this accords with Rev. 16: 14.—Spirits of Devils working miracles, gathering the Kings of the earth and the whole world to battle. Yes, as Kossuth says, "The last battle in mankind's history."

Mr. Bickersteth, in his "Practical Guide to the Prophecies," says, on p. 114,—"The Scriptures which have been quoted from the epistles of St. John and Matt. 24: 44, seem to me to justify our viewing the name of Antichrist [illegible], or in spirit, as descriptive of the veiled and mystical opponents of Christ, and [illegible]larly, or in person, as descriptive of an open and avowed enemy, to be put down at the coming of our Lord. The two forms of Antichrist seem clearly set before us in 2 Thess. 2. We see there a double withholding, and a double revealing; a man of sin and a lawless one. . . . The first, the Man of Sin, I think has fully been proved to apply to Popery; the second, the Lawless One, applies to the speedily to be developed Antichrist." P. 123.—"The spirit of Antichrist is to be found working its way to its last consummation by Infidelity in Protestant as well as in Papal and Mohammedan lands. It is greatly to be feared that the infidel form of Antichrist is now the prevailing form, and that among all classes of christians."

A correspondent from Paris writes; "Instead of there being thirty-five million of Catholics in France, there is thirty-five million of infidels."

In a note on p. 123, Mr. Bickersteth says; "The Socialists, or avowed Atheists, are rapidly spreading through our own land (England) as similarly minded men are on the continent." P. 124.—"Everywhere we see an open advance in the expression of infidelity. The growth of piety will more and more call forth the enmity of Satan, and that enmity will become more marked and more vivid, till it assumes its last shape and highest [illegible]. We are also told that the ten horns have one mind, and shall give their power and strength to the beast.—(Antichrist in his last form.")

The author sees, then, considerable ground for the opinion entertained by some, that there may yet take place a heading up, as it were, of the prophecies in these last days; a concentrated and combined exhibition of the apostasy of short continuance, under avowed [illegible]ity, in a more glaring and blasphemous defiance of God, and possibly under some INDIVIDUAL PERSON, and accompanied with bitter sufferings of the church."

The author gives the following extract of a letter from the able correspondent of the Record, dated Oct. 2, 1838: "[illegible]terly in fact has the christian faith been abjured in this country, that an Editor of one of the most popular journals here, and a distinguished author, declared to me a few days ago in conversation, that he was strongly of opinion that the world was traveling to the production of a new religion, which would finally abolish christianity. Questions and Answers for a Seeker after Truth.

Q. Was man made from dust, or was he a part of God?

A. And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground. Gen. 2 : 7.

Q. Did the man, or his breath which was breathed into him, become a living soul?

A. And man became a living soul. Gen. 2 : 7.

Q. Was man to return to dust, or was he to go to heaven?

A. For dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return. Gen. 3 : 19.

Q. Did Hezekiah, when warned of God that he should die, expect to go to heaven and see the Lord, or to the grave?

A. I shall go to the gates of the grave; . . . I said I shall not see THE LORD, even the Lord, in the land of the living. Isa. 38 : 10, 11.

Q. Did David expect to be satisfied when he died, or when he awoke from death?

A. I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness. Ps. 17 : 15.

Q. Is David in heaven, or is he in the grave?

A. Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. . . For David is not ascended into the heavens. Acts 2 : 29, 34.

Q. Did Paul expect to get his crown at death, or at the appearing of Jesus Christ?

A. I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom. . . . Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. 2 Tim. 4 : 1–8.

Q. Did Peter teach that men receive a crown of glory at death, or at the appearing of Christ?

A. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. 1 Pet. 5 : 4.

Q. Did Jesus teach that men were recompensed at death, or at the resurrection?

A. Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Luke 14 : 14.

Q. Is man mortal, or immortal?

A. Shall mortal man be more just than God? Job 4 : 17.

Q. How can man obtain immortality?

A. To them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life. Rom. 2 : 7.

Q. Was immortality brought to light through the philosophers, Plato, &c., or by Jesus Christ through the gospel?

A. But is now made manifest by the appearing of Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. 2 Tim. 1 : 10.

Q. Are the righteous recompensed in heaven, and the wicked in hell, or in the earth?

A. Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth: much more the wicked and the sinner. Rev. 11 : 31.

Q. Will the meek inherit heaven, or the earth?

A. Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth. Matt. 5 : 5. But the meek shall inherit the earth." Ps. 37 : 11.

Q. Are we to reign in heaven, or on the earth?

A. We shall reign on the earth. Rev. 5 : 10.

[illegible] Is the earth, or heaven, given to men?

[illegible] The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men. Ps. 115 : 16.

Q. Where will the Kingdom be located which is to be given to the saints; above the heavens, in the heavens, or under [illegible]

[illegible] the kingdom and dominion, and [illegible] of the kingdom under the [illegible], shall be given to the people [illegible] of the Most High, whose [illegible] an everlasting kingdom. Dan. [illegible]

The Soul.—No. 10.

We now pass to the examination of the 21st text in order, where the word nephesh, soul, occurs, which is in Gen. 23 : 8. "And he (Abraham) communed with them, saying, if it be your mind (nephesh) that I should bury my dead out of my sight, hear me." In this example, we have found a new rendering of nephesh. It is thus rendered fifteen times out of the seven hundred and fifty-two. The other fourteen are in Deut. 18 : 6, 28 : 65; 1 Sam. 2 : 35; 2 Sam. 17 : 8; 2 Kings 9 : 15; 1 Chron. 28 : 9; Jer. 15 : 1; Ezk. 23 : 17, 18 twice, 22, 28,—24 : 25, 36 : 5.

When nephesh is rendered mind, it seems to be used to represent desire, or a state of feeling, but not a hint that this nephesh, mind, feeling, or desire is immortal and survives the death of the man. Let the Bible explain itself, and we think all is plain on this point. In Deut. 23 : 24, we read, "When thou comest into thy neighbor's vineyard, then thou mayest eat grapes thy fill at thine own pleasure, (nephesh,) but thou shalt not put any in thy vessel." Nephesh might be rendered mind in this last example, as well as in Gen. 23 : 8. It is rendered desire in the Septuagint. Take another similar example. Ps. 105 : 22. "To bind his princes at his pleasure (nephesh) and teach his senators wisdom." Again, Jer. 34 : 16. "But ye turned, and polluted my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom he had set at liberty at their pleasure, (nephesh) to return, and brought them into subjection, to be unto you for servants and for handmaids." In these examples, we have the true sense of nephesh in its fourth and last sense; to wit, a desire or state of feeling. Eccl. 6 : 9. "Better is the sight of the eyes than the wandering of the desire," (nephesh.) Micah 7 : 3. "And the great man, he uttereth his mischievous desire, (nephesh.) Jer. 22 : 27. "But to the land whereunto they desire (nephesh) to return, thither shall they return." In all these examples it would be as proper to insert mind as in the cases where nephesh is thus rendered; but all can see that the word desire gives the true idea. A desire is not a being that exists independent of an organism, going to its reward or punishment when the one who had the desire is dead.

Nephesh is also rendered heart fifteen times, and occurs in the following passages:—Ex. 23 : 9; Lev. 26 : 15; Deut. 24 : 15; 1 Sam. 2 : 33; 2 Sam. 3 : 21; Ps. 10 : 3; Prov. 23 : 7, 28 : 25, 31 : 6; Jer. 42; 20; Lam. 3 : 51; Ezk. 25 : 6, 15, 27 : 31; Hosea 4 : 8. The remarks we have made in relation to mind, when from nephesh, are applicable to heart when from the same word. In all these examples we find no hint that any conscious part survives the death of the man.

Nephesh is also rendered lust, another word expressing desire. See Ps. 78 : 18. "And they tempted God in their heart, by asking meat for their lust, (nephesh.) Had the translators have rendered nephesh soul, in this passage, then we should understand that the soul desired meat to eat. In that case it must be something more than a "principle." Again, in Ex. 15 : 9, we read, "The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil; my lust (nephesh) shall be satisfied upon them; I will draw my sword, my hand shall destroy them." Here we have further examples of nephesh when used to represent desire. Isa. 56 : 11. "Yea, they are greedy (nephesh, margin, strong of appetite,) dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand." Here, nephesh is rendered by another word expressing desire. Deut. 21 : 14. "Then thou shalt let her go whither she will," (nephesh) that is, where she desires. Ps. 27 : 12. "Deliver me not over to the will (nephesh) of mine enemies;" or, do not yield to their desire. Nephesh is also rendered the will in Ezk. 16 : 27. 1 Sam. 22 : 2. "And every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented, (nephesh) gathered themselves unto him." In this example, nephesh is used to express an ungratified desire. Prov. 23 : 2. "Put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite," (nephesh.) Appetite is another word to express strong desire.

Without pursuing this point further, we think it is clear that when nephesh is rendered mind, desire, &c., it conveys no idea that something is meant, that is conscious when the physical organism is destroyed. The whole Bible seems to harmonize beautifully with the sentiment of the Psalmist, when he says, speaking of man, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." The Septuagint reads, "all his thoughts." Shall we contradict the Psalmist, and declare that man can think better when he is dead, and knows more than when alive?

Poultney.

We presume our readers have become interested in the great work at Poultney, and would like to hear more good news from that place. The interest continues unabated. The Lord is doing glorious things for that people. We closed our last report Dec. 7th. We continued our meetings through the week and over the Lord's day, 12th inst. The voice of new witnesses was heard every evening, speaking of the goodness of God in forgiving their sins. Every body is talking about religion during the day. Some oppose, but more are considering the subject in a serious manner. The Bible is read with a deep interest by those who had lost all confidence in churches and the Holy Book. Those who thought they could never understand the Bible, now stand amazed at its simplicity and beautiful harmony. Four deacons of different churches, take an active part in the meetings, and two or three who have preached the word, but the leading clergymen in the vicinity stand aloof. One refused to visit with me at the house of one of his most active members. Several of his church wished me to preach in their house, but he said if I did, he should not go into it any more. O Lord, forgive him, he knows not what he is doing. In spite of all opposition, the truth is spreading with great power, and the most have concluded to let the Lord work in his own way.

The day we came away, we learned some interesting facts relative to the house where we worship. It is known as the Stone Church. Some years since, before the Troy Conference Academy was built in this place, the people in the centre of the town objected to having the post office in what was then called West Poultney, now Poultney, because they had no church. This saying aroused some deists—wealthy and prominent citizens—who combined and built this Stone Church on an elevated and pleasant situation. There were a few poor and persecuted Methodists in the vicinity, who had the privilege of occupying the house. The work of the Lord revived, the deists were converted and became active in the cause of Christ. This was the Methodist church, till a few years since, when they concluded to have a more fashionable house, and this was abandoned. The people have become satisfied that something more than a fashionable house is necessary for religious prosperity. A short time since the "Old Stone Church" was bought of the Methodists by several of the prominent citizens, and fitted up in a neat manner, and called "Union Hall." We preached the second sermon that was heard in Union Hall, being invited by unconverted men, and opposed by nearly all the members of the churches. Subsequently, we received a petition, signed by eighteen citizens of Poultney, most, if not all, of whom were unconverted men, to come and preach in Union Hall. Now, several of them are rejoicing in the Lord, and others are under conviction, and we fondly hope every one of them will become the followers of Christ.

Lord's day, Dec. 12th, we met at half past 9 o'clock, for a love feast, and in one hour we had ninety-three testimonies. It was truly a love feast. Nine were baptized in the afternoon, and several others stand ready to go at the next opportunity. In the evening about fifty sat down to the table of the Lord to commemorate the sufferings of Christ. At the close of the communion, the seats were vacated, and twenty-five mourners came forward and occupied them. It was a scene of great interest. A mother who had agonized in prayer for her son, while in her closet, when she saw him among the mourners, and afterwards heard him testify that the Lord had forgiven his sins, pressed her way to the table, and reaching across, took him by the hand, clasping him in her embrace, thanking God for answering her prayers. Others followed her example, when the scene became one of thrilling interest. Thus closed the evening. We reluctantly left them in the morning, intending to return Dec. 25th, to remain one week or more.

The Sufficiency of Revelation.

"If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."—Luke 16 : 31.

(Concluded.)

We often hear persons remark, "If I had lived in the time of Christ, and had seen his miracles, I would not have rejected him as did the Jews." But this, while it sounds well, is evidently, in most cases, untrue. Such remarks as the above, come generally from that class who are guilty of doing as bad, if not worse, than did that people. These persons refuse to believe in Christ. Why is this? It is not for lack of evidence, for they not only have what the Jews had, but much more. In addition to Moses and the prophets, they have Christ and the apostles. They have "line upon line," "precept upon precept," "here a little and there a little." Why do they then reject Christ, and utterly refuse to believe in him? Why do they treat his doctrine with contempt, and "put his words far from them?" Why tread his mercies in the dust, and do despite to the spirit of grace? Why all this? It is not for lack of evidence. But it is now, as it ever has been, because men love "darkness rather than light," on account of their deeds being evil.

Again. We often hear the remark, "If I could only see the Savior and converse with him, I would believe." But this, as the former remark, is evidently untrue. The generation living at the time the Savior was on the earth, though they saw and conversed with him, rejected him. And it was to them that Christ addressed the language, "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me." And what was said to them may be said to all that class to-day. Human nature is unchanged. If the Jews could converse with the Son of God, hear him discourse on the most interesting topics ever presented to the consideration of man,—witness the stupendous miracles he wrought and the wonders he performed; and after all, reject him, utterly refuse to believe him; is it to be supposed that mankind would do differently, had they the same opportunity to-day? Nay, verily! The human heart is still "deceitful above all things." It manifests the same aversion to truth and virtue as formerly. It may have changed in its tactics, but it is the same "old wolf" in sheep's clothing. Though convinced of the innocence of Jesus, as was Pilate, and obliged to confess "I find no fault in him;" yet, ready to deliver him into the bands of the rabble. Or, like another, who after being convinced of the truth, said, "Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee." Religion with them becomes a secondary affair, something to be attended to when there is nothing else to do.

But again. Suppose this request could be granted, and one should come from the dead. What then? In order to be entitled to our confidence, he would have to show that he sustained a virtuous character, and also, that his mission is sustained by the Lord—that it is of heavenly origin. To do this, he must, by direct declaration from heaven, have his pretensions authorized. But this would be nothing new. He that spake as man never spake, said, concerning his Son, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him." If we do not pay attention to the latter, why should we listen to the former? If we cannot believe in the first instance when God speaks, what reason have we to believe that we should credit him in the second?

Again. If his mission be sustained by miracles, why should we give preference to his and reject those which are much greater? Christ sustained his pretensions by healing the sick, cleansing the lepers, raising the dead, casting out devils, opening the eyes of the blind, &c. If these failed to convince the generation living at the time Christ was on the earth, similar events would fail to determine the human mind at the present day! We cannot go from the greater to the less. And inasmuch as the miracles of Christ and the apostles failed to convince the Jews at the first advent, nothing of this kind would secure the belief of the masses at the present time.

There is, then, only one more source of evidence, that is the word of God. If referred to, this question is easily settled, for this is an end of the controversy. It is agreeable to the old motto—"To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." It is fatal to this system to refer it to the adjudication of Scripture. There is no one thing more distinctly condemned than this seeking unto familiar spirits, and unto "wizards that peep and that mutter." It becomes our duty to "prove all things." Not to believe every spirit, "but try the spirits whether they are of God:" knowing that "many false prophets are gone out into the world." Hence we see the perfect fallacy, the real deceptive character of this pretense. If persons will not hear Moses and the prophets; if they will not give heed to Christ and the apostles, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

Boston.

The meetings in Boston are very encouraging. Bro. E. Burnham supplies the desk in our absence, and is listened to by a crowded house of intelligent and deeply interested hearers. A large Bible class, conducted by Bro. Burnham, is searching the Scriptures as for hid treasure. The prayer meetings at the office are heavenly and delightful. Peace and love abound. Praise the Lord.

The Discussion.

The discussion between Dr. J. Litch of Philadelphia, and the Ed. of the Crisis is now ready. The question discussed was as follows:—"Do the Scriptures teach the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Price 37 1-2 cts. single, 1-4 off by the dozen.

Perhaps the following from the Advent Herald will present the reasons for holding and publishing the discussion, better than any thing we can write.

"It may not be unimportant to say a few words on the origin and object of the discussion.

Several years ago, Dr Litch took the position that the question of materialism, as it was propagated by a portion of the professed Advent ministers, was very injurious to the Advent cause, and took his stand and wrote and preached against it. He at the same time invited any one, or all the advocates of the doctrine, to discuss the subject with him.

At the late Conference in Worcester, Mass., Eld. Grant accepted the invitation, and the report of the discussion is now published.

I have several reasons for engaging in its publication.

First. I believe the doctrine of materialism is utterly at variance with the word of God. And therefore any Scriptural light that can be thrown on the subject of man's nature, his state in death, and final destiny, will be a blessing to the church and the world.

Second. As the question has been introduced among Adventists, and is being pressed with great zeal and industry, by the advocates of the materialistic view, I am interested all the more in this publication, as it gives—not one, but both sides.

Third. As another, and important reason, those Adventists who reject materialism as an error, can no longer, in justice to the cause of truth, remain silent. Things have arrived at such a state that we from necessity, are obliged, while we do not turn aside from what we have considered our more important work, to both defend ourselves from misrepresentation, and show the truthfulness of our own position.

Finally, we commend this work to all who wish to read a brief, yet clear and sound view of the Bible argument, by Dr. Litch. And I would also commend to all, the arguments of Elder Grant, as giving a fair view of the school of materialism to which he belongs.

To those who think the subject should not be agitated, I have only to say, that they, nor we, cannot help it. With some, it is the great question, and they will advocate it; and we have got to meet it. We who have been disposed to take the position of silent forbearance, can do so no longer.

Let every one consider this question candidly, carefully and prayerfully, and then act as will best subserve the cause of Christ and the salvation of men."

Bro. D. T. Taylor.

We have just received painful intelligence from our dear Bro. Taylor. He says:—"Alas, how heavily drags the time to me. I am doing nothing; have not preached but two Sundays for four weeks. No remedy yet reaches my disease, which is spinal,—also ossification [changing to bone] of the heart. I may never recover. Yet, believing in the power and efficacy of faith, I humbly and earnestly request the brethren every where to pray God for my restoration to health."

O let the prayer of faith ascend for our dear brother, that he may be speedily restored to health and active labor in the vineyard of the Lord. We propose, that those who have faith in God, should fast Friday night, Dec. 24th, and retire to their closets at 6 o'clock, if convenient, to unite in presenting a petition to our heavenly Father for Bro. Taylor's recovery. "The prayer of faith shall save the sick."

[illegible] mise, [illegible] understand the [illegible] people who have once, be[illegible] ses sure, and lived in accord[illegible] profession; and showed to [illegible] faith in the promises of God [illegible] once, with confidence and with [illegible] anticipations of the consummation of the christian's hope, could exhort a dying world to flee to Christ, the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world; and to be prepared for the coming King. Their expectations were crossed; the blessed Lord whom they so much loved did not come when they believed and expected he would come to deliver them, and give them immortality and eternal life. They were disappointed, and many therefore have counted his promise slack, and have said we shall not know any thing about his coming. To you, dear friend, I can say, Jesus will come. All the signs and prophecies are almost fulfilled, and his not coming as soon as we expected, I understand to be his long suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.

And to you, dear reader, (if you know not God as yet,) this long suffering is extended. And as one that loves you, I would invite you to accept of offered mercy, while it is held out to you. Get the grace of God in your heart, that you with meet preparation may endure the hour of temptation which is now coming upon all those that dwell upon the face of the whole earth. Prophecies are closing up; and soon comes the time of trouble (spoken of in Dan. 12 : 1,) such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time, no, nor ever shall be; and at that time God's people will be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. He will come. In the end the vision is to speak and not lie; and though it tarry, wait for it, for it will surely come, it will not tarry.

How often the weary pilgrim, when he looks forward to that blessed resurrection morn, repeats the language of his heart, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." I suppose that some think it strange that we can centre all our hope on the resurrection. Well, it is because Jesus himself rose, and pledged a resurrection of the dead; and were it not for the resurrection of the dead, we should (as Paul says) be of all men the most miserable.

Brn. and Srs., you who have access to the throne of grace, pray for me. I am deprived of many privileges; but hope to endure unto the end, and have a crown of life when Jesus comes.

Bible Order.

Coming into fellowship with Christ by conversion, we have fellowship with the branches or fruits. Do not the grape fruits, to which Christ alludes, appear in bunches or clusters, all abiding in the vine, yet separate? Some have more than others.

There is historical and Bible testimony sufficient to justify christians in certain localities associating themselves together in a family capacity, to care for each other especially.

A bunch of grapes is a good representation of the church in each place. Order is heaven's first law; and without any kind of family association or rule, there is no obligation, no sympathy, no care. Beasts know better than this. They do associate together, and have order. Fowls go in flocks, with their leaders ahead. Every thing seems to be more consistent than some of our Advent brethren; who are so afraid of every thing like order, they have run into the opposite ditch. We have seen the effects, and must do something to remedy the evil.

For my part, I have suffered enough, and shall go for some kind of order to remedy this evil. My experience has convinced me, and I shall act according to my conviction. HIRAM MUNGER.

☞ Men may obey others from fear or self-interest; but the christian obeys "because the love of Christ constraineth him."

☞ The Lord alone has life in himself, and men exist and subsist from him. Their existence is his perpetual gift.

Questions and Answers for a Seeker after Truth.

Q. Was man made from dust, or was he a part of God?

A. And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground. Gen. 2: 7.

Q. Did the man, or his breath which was breathed into him, become a living soul?

A. And man became a living soul. Gen. 2: 7.

Q. Was man to return to dust, or was he to go to heaven?

A. For dust thou art, and unto dust shall thou return. Gen. 3: 19.

Q. Did Hezekiah, when warned of God that he should die, expect to go to heaven and see the Lord, or to the grave?

A. I shall go to the gates of the grave; ... I said I shall not see THE LORD, even the Lord, in the land of the living. Isa. 38: 10, 11.

Q. Did David expect to be satisfied when he died, or when he awoke from death?

A. I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness. Ps. 17: 15.

Q. Is David in heaven, or is he in the grave?

A. Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. . . For David is not ascended into the heavens. Acts 2: 29, 34.

Q. Did Paul expect to get his crown at death, or at the appearing of Jesus Christ?

A. I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom. . . . Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing. 2 Tim. 4: 1–8.

Q. Did Peter teach that men receive a crown of glory at death, or at the appearing of Christ?

A. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. 1 Pet. 5: 4.

Q. Did Jesus teach that men were recompensed at death, or at the resurrection?

A. Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Luke 14: 14.

Q. Is man mortal, or immortal?

A. Shall mortal man be more just than God? Job 4: 17.

Q. How can man obtain immortality?

A. To them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life. Rom. 2: 7.

Q. Was immortality brought to light through the philosophers, Plato, &c., or by Jesus Christ through the gospel?

A. But is now made manifest by the appearing of Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. 2 Tim. 1: 10.

Q. Are the righteous recompensed in heaven, and the wicked in hell, or in the earth?

A. Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth: much more the wicked and the sinner. Rev. 11: 31.

Q. Will the meek inherit heaven, or the earth?

A. Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth. Matt. 5: 5. But the meek shall inherit the earth." Ps. 37: 11.

Q. Are we to reign in heaven, or on the earth?

A. We shall reign on the earth. Rev. 5: 10.

Q. Is the earth, or heaven, given to men?

A. The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men. Ps. 115: 16.

Q. Where will the Kingdom be located which is to be given to the saints; above the heavens, in the heavens, or under [illegible]

The Soul.—No. 10.

We now pass to the examination of the 21st text in order, where the word nephesh, soul, occurs, which is in Gen. 23: 8. "And he (Abraham) communed with them, saying, if it be your mind (nephesh) that I should bury my dead out of my sight, hear me." In this example, we have found a new rendering of nephesh. It is thus rendered fifteen times out of the seven hundred and fifty-two. The other fourteen are in Deut. 18: 6, 28: 65; 1 Sam. 2: 35; 2 Sam. 17: 8; 2 Kings 9: 15; 1 Chron. 28: 9; Jer. 15: 1; Ezk. 23: 17, 18 twice, 22, 28,—24: 25, 36: 5.

When nephesh is rendered mind, it seems to be used to represent desire, or a state of feeling, but not a hint that this nephesh, mind, feeling, or desire is immortal and survives the death of the man. Let the Bible explain itself, and we think all is plain on this point. In Deut. 23: 24, we read, "When thou comest into thy neighbor's vineyard, then thou mayest eat grapes thy fill at thine own pleasure, (nephesh,) but thou shalt not put any in thy vessel." Nephesh might be rendered mind in this last example, as well as in Gen. 23: 8. It is rendered desire in the Septuagint. Take another similar example. Ps. 105: 22. "To bind his princes at his pleasure (nephesh) and teach his senators wisdom." Again, Jer. 34: 16. "But ye turned, and polluted my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom he had set at liberty at their pleasure, (nephesh) to return, and brought them into subjection, to be unto you for servants and for handmaids." In these examples, we have the true sense of nephesh in its fourth and last sense; to wit, a desire or state of feeling. Eccl. 6: 9. "Better is the sight of the eyes than the wandering of the desire," (nephesh.) Micah 7: 3. "And the great man, he uttereth his mischievous desire, (nephesh.) Jer. 22: 27. "But to the land whereunto they desire (nephesh) to return, thither shall they return." In all these examples it would be as proper to insert mind as in the cases where nephesh is thus rendered; but all can see that the word desire gives the true idea. A desire is not a being that exists independent of an organism, going to its reward or punishment when the one who had the desire is dead.

Nephesh is also rendered heart fifteen times, and occurs in the following passages:—Ex. 23: 9; Lev. 26: 15; Deut. 24: 15; 1 Sam. 2: 33; 2 Sam. 3: 21; Ps. 10: 3; Prov. 23: 7, 28: 25, 31: 6; Jer. 42: 20; Lam. 3: 51; Ezk. 25: 6, 15, 27: 31; Hosea 4: 8. The remarks we have made in relation to mind, when from nephesh, are applicable to heart when from the same word. In all these examples we find no hint that any conscious part survives the death of the man.

Nephesh is also rendered lust, another word expressing desire. See Ps. 78: 18. "And they tempted God in their heart, by asking meat for their lust, (nephesh.) Had the translators have rendered nephesh soul, in this passage, then we should understand that the soul desired meat to eat. In that case it must be something more than a "principle." Again, in Ex. 15: 9, we read, "The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil; my lust (nephesh) shall be satisfied upon them; I will draw my sword, my hand shall destroy them." Here we have further examples of nephesh when used to represent desire. Isa. 56: 11. "Yea, they are greedy (nephesh, margin, strong of appetite,) dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand." Here, nephesh is rendered by another word expressing desire. Deut. 21: 14. "Then thou shalt let her go whither she will," (nephesh) that is, where she desires. Ps. 27: 12. "Deliver me not over to the will (nephesh) of mine enemies;" or, do not yield to their desire. Nephesh is also rendered the will in Ezk. 16: 27. 1 Sam. 22: 2. "And every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented, (nephesh) gathered themselves unto him." In this example, nephesh is used to express an ungratified desire. Prov. 23: 2. "Put a knife to thy throat, if thou be a man given to appetite," (nephesh.) Appetite is another word to express strong desire.

Without pursuing this point further, we think it is clear that when nephesh is rendered mind, desire, &c., it conveys no idea that something is meant, that is conscious when the physical organism is destroyed. The whole Bible seems to harmonize beautifully with the sentiment of the Psalmist, when he says, speaking of man, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." The Septuagint reads, "all his thoughts." Shall we contradict the Psalmist, and declare that man can think better when he is dead, and knows more than when alive?

Poultney.

We presume our readers have become interested in the great work at Poultney, and would like to hear more good news from that place. The interest continues unabated. The Lord is doing glorious things for that people. We closed our last report Dec. 7th. We continued our meetings through the week and over the Lord's day, 12th inst. O Lord, forgive him, he knows not what he is doing. In spite of all opposition, the truth is spreading with great power, and the most have concluded to let the Lord work in his own way.

The day we came away, we learned some interesting facts relative to the house where we worship. It is known as the Stone Church. Some years since, before the Troy Conference Academy was built in this place, the people in the centre of the town objected to having the post office in what was then called West Poultney, now Poultney, because they had no church. This saying aroused some deists—wealthy and prominent citizens—who combined and built this Stone Church on an elevated and pleasant situation. There were a few poor and persecuted Methodists in the vicinity, who had the privilege of occupying the house. The work of the Lord revived, the deists were converted and became active in the cause of Christ. This was the Methodist church, till a few years since, when they concluded to have a more fashionable house, and this was abandoned. The people have become satisfied that something more than a fashionable house is necessary for religious prosperity. A short time since the "Old Stone Church" was bought of the Methodists by several of the prominent citizens, and fitted up in a neat manner, and called "Union Hall." We preached the second sermon that was heard in Union Hall, being invited by unconverted men, and opposed by nearly all the members of the churches. Subsequently, we received a petition, signed by eighteen citizens of Poultney, most, if not all, of whom were unconverted men, to come and preach in Union Hall. Now, several of them are rejoicing in the Lord, and others are under conviction, and we fondly hope every one of them will become the followers of Christ.

Lord's day, Dec. 12th, we met at half past 9 o'clock, for a love feast, and in one hour we had ninety-three testimonies. It was truly a love feast. Nine were baptized in the afternoon, and several others stand ready to go at the next opportunity. In the evening about fifty sat down to the table of the Lord to commemorate the sufferings of Christ. At the close of the communion, the seats were vacated, and twenty-five mourners came forward and occupied them. It was a scene of great interest. A mother who had agonized in prayer for her son, while in her closet, when she saw him among the mourners, and afterwards heard him testify that the Lord had forgiven his sins, pressed her way to the table, and reaching across, took him by the hand, clasping him in her embrace, thanking God for answering her prayers. Others followed her example, when the scene became one of thrilling interest. Thus closed the evening. We reluctantly left them in the morning, intending to return Dec. 25th, to remain one week or more.

The Sufficiency of Revelation.

"If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead."—LUKE 16: 31.

(Concluded.)

We often hear persons remark, "If I had lived in the time of Christ, and had seen his miracles, I would not have rejected him as did the Jews." But this, while it sounds well, is evidently, in most cases, untrue. Such remarks as the above, come generally from that class who are guilty of doing as bad, if not worse, than did that people. These persons refuse to believe in Christ. Why is this? It is not for lack of evidence, for they not only have what the Jews had, but much more. In addition to Moses and the prophets, they have Christ and the apostles. They have "line upon line," "precept upon precept," "here a little and there a little." Why do they then reject Christ, and utterly refuse to believe in him? Why do they treat his doctrine with contempt, and "put his words far from them?" Why tread his mercies in the dust, and do despite to the spirit of grace? Why all this? It is not for lack of evidence. But it is now, as it ever has been, because men love "darkness rather than light," on account of their deeds being evil.

Again. We often hear the remark, "If I could only see the Savior and converse with him, I would believe." But this, as the former remark, is evidently untrue. The generation living at the time the Savior was on the earth, though they saw and conversed with him, rejected him. And it was to them that Christ addressed the language, "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me." And what was said to them may be said to all that class to-day. Human nature is unchanged. If the Jews could converse with the Son of God, hear him discourse on the most interesting topics ever presented to the consideration of man,—witness the stupendous miracles he wrought and the wonders he performed; and after all, reject him, utterly refuse to believe him; is it to be supposed that mankind would do differently, had they the same opportunity to-day? Nay, verily! The human heart is still "deceitful above all things." It manifests the same aversion to truth and virtue as formerly. It may have changed in its tactics, but it is the same "old wolf" in sheep's clothing. Though convinced of the innocence of Jesus, as was Pilate, and obliged to confess "I find no fault in him;" yet, ready to deliver him into the hands of the rabble. Or, like another, who after being convinced of the truth, said, "Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee." Religion with them becomes a secondary affair, something to be attended to when there is nothing else to do.

But again. Suppose this request could be granted, and one should come from the dead. What then? In order to be entitled to our confidence, he would have to show that he sustained a virtuous character, and also, that his mission is sustained by the Lord—that it is of heavenly origin. To do this, he must, by direct declaration from heaven, have his pretensions authorized. But this would be nothing new. He that spake as man never spake, said, concerning his Son, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him." If we do not pay attention to the latter, why should we listen to the former? If we cannot believe in the first instance when God speaks, what reason have we to believe that we should credit him in the second?

Again. If his mission be sustained by miracles, why should we give preference to his and reject those which are much greater? Christ sustained his pretensions by healing the sick, cleansing the lepers, raising the dead, casting out devils, opening the eyes of the blind, &c. If these failed to convince the generation living at the time Christ was on the earth, similar events would fail to determine the human mind at the present day! We cannot go from the greater to the less. And inasmuch as the miracles of Christ and the apostles failed to convince the Jews at the first advent, nothing of this kind would secure the belief of the masses at the present time.

There is, then, only one more source of evidence, that is the word of God. If referred to, this question is easily settled, for this is an end of the controversy. It is agreeable to the old motto—"To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." It is fatal to this system to refer it to the adjudication of Scripture. There is no one thing more distinctly condemned than this seeking unto familiar spirits, and unto "wizards that peep and that mutter." It becomes our duty to "prove all things." Not to believe every spirit, "but try the spirits whether they are of God:" knowing that "many false prophets are gone out into the world." Hence we see the perfect fallacy, the real deceptive character of this pretense. If persons will not hear Moses and the prophets; if they will not give heed to Christ and the apostles, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

Boston.

The meetings in Boston are very encouraging. Bro. E. Burnham supplies the desk in our absence, and is listened to by a crowded house of intelligent and deeply interested hearers. A large Bible class, conducted by Bro. Burnham, is searching the Scriptures as for hid treasure. The prayer meetings at the office are heavenly and delightful. Peace and love abound. Praise the Lord.

The Discussion.

The discussion between Dr. J. Litch of Philadelphia, and the Ed. of the Crisis is now ready. The question discussed was as follows:—"Do the Scriptures teach the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked?" Price 37 1-2 cts. single, 1-4 off by the dozen.

Perhaps the following from the Advent Herald will present the reasons for holding and publishing the discussion, better than any thing we can write.

"It may not be unimportant to say a few words on the origin and object of the discussion.

Several years ago, Dr Litch took the position that the question of materialism, as it was propagated by a portion of the professed Advent ministers, was very injurious to the Advent cause, and took his stand and wrote and preached against it. He at the same time invited any one, or all the advocates of the doctrine, to discuss the subject with him.

At the late Conference in Worcester, Mass., Eld. Grant accepted the invitation, and the report of the discussion is now published.

I have several reasons for engaging in its publication.

First. I believe the doctrine of materialism is utterly at variance with the word of God. And therefore any Scriptural light that can be thrown on the subject of man's nature, his state in death, and final destiny, will be a blessing to the church and the world.

Second. As the question has been introduced among Adventists, and is being pressed with great zeal and industry, by the advocates of the materialistic view, I am interested all the more in this publication, as it gives—not one, but both sides.

Third. As another, and important reason, those Adventists who reject materialism as an error, can no longer, in justice to the cause of truth, remain silent. Things have arrived at such a state that we from necessity, are obliged, while we do not turn aside from what we have considered our more important work, to both defend ourselves from misrepresentation, and show the truthfulness of our own position.

Finally, we commend this work to all who wish to read a brief, yet clear and sound view of the Bible argument, by Dr. Litch. And I would also commend to all, the arguments of Elder Grant, as giving a fair view of the school of materialism to which he belongs.

To those who think the subject should not be agitated, I have only to say, that they, nor we, cannot help it. With some, it is the great question, and they will advocate it; and we have got to meet it. We who have been disposed to take the position of silent forbearance, can do so no longer.

Let every one consider this question candidly, carefully and prayerfully, and then act as will best subserve the cause of Christ and the salvation of men."

Bro. D. T. Taylor.

We have just received painful intelligence from our dear Bro. Taylor. He says:—"Alas, how heavily drags the time to me. I am doing nothing; have not preached but two Sundays for four weeks. No remedy yet reaches my disease, which is spinal,—also ossification [changing to bone] of the heart. I may never recover. Yet, believing in the power and efficacy of faith, I humbly and earnestly request the brethren every where to pray God for my restoration to health."

O let the prayer of faith ascend for our dear brother, that he may be speedily restored to health and active labor in the vineyard of the Lord. We propose, that those who have faith in God, should fast Friday night, Dec. 24th, and retire to their closets at 6 o'clock, if convenient, to unite in presenting a petition to our heavenly Father for Bro. Taylor's recovery. "The prayer of faith shall save the sick."

[illegible] mise, [illegible] understand the [illegible] people who have once be[illegible] sure, and lived in accord[illegible] profession, and showed to th[illegible] faith in the promises of God[illegible] once, with confidence and with [illegible] anticipations of the consummation of the christian's hope, could exhort a dying world to flee to Christ, the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world; and to be prepared for the coming King. Their expectations were crossed; the blessed Lord whom they so much loved did not come when they believed and expected he would come to deliver them, and give them immortality and eternal life. They were disappointed, and many therefore have counted his promise slack, and have said we shall not know any thing about his coming. To you, dear friend, I can say, Jesus will come. All the signs and prophecies are almost fulfilled, and his not coming as soon as we expected, I understand to be his long suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.

And to you, dear reader, (if you know not God as yet,) this long suffering is extended. And as one that loves you, I would invite you to accept of offered mercy, while it is held out to you. Get the grace of God in your heart, that you with meet preparation may endure the hour of temptation which is now coming upon all those that dwell upon the face of the whole earth. Prophecies are closing up; and soon comes the time of trouble (spoken of in Dan. 12: 1,) such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time, no, nor ever shall be; and at that time God's people will be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. He will come. In the end the vision is to speak and not lie; and though it tarry, wait for it, for it will surely come, it will not tarry.

How often the weary pilgrim, when he looks forward to that blessed resurrection morn, repeats the language of his heart, 'Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.' I suppose that some think it strange that we can centre all our hope on the resurrection. Well, it is because Jesus himself rose, and pledged a resurrection of the dead; and were it not for the resurrection of the dead, we should (as Paul says) be of all men the most miserable.

Brn. and Srs., you who have access to the throne of grace, pray for me. I am deprived of many privileges; but hope to endure unto the end, and have a crown of life when Jesus comes.

Bible Order.

Coming into fellowship with Christ by conversion, we have fellowship with the branches or fruits. Do not the grape fruits, to which Christ alludes, appear in bunches or clusters, all abiding in the vine, yet separate? Some have more than others.

There is historical and Bible testimony sufficient to justify christians in certain localities associating themselves together in a family capacity, to care for each other especially.

A bunch of grapes is a good representation of the church in each place. Order is heaven's first law; and without any kind of family association or rule, there is no obligation, no sympathy, no care. Beasts know better than this. They do associate together, and have order. Fowls go in flocks, with their leaders ahead. Every thing seems to be more consistent than some of our Advent brethren; who are so afraid of every thing like order, they have run into the opposite ditch. We have seen the effects, and must do something to remedy the evil.

For my part, I have suffered enough, and shall go for some kind of order to remedy this evil. My experience has convinced me, and I shall act according to my conviction. HIRAM MUNGER.

☞ Men may obey others from fear or self-interest; but the christian obeys "because the love of Christ constraineth him."

☞ The Lord alone has life in himself, and men exist and subsist from him. Their existence is his perpetual gift.

For the Crisis.

My Experience;

[illegible] WHAT I HAVE HEARD, SEEN AND FELT OF SPIRITUALISM.

[illegible] BRO. GRANT:—I have concluded, [illegible] due consideration of the matter, to [illegible] you with a detailed account of the [illegible] through which I have passed in the [illegible] few years, in connection with many [illegible] which I saw by the way; and will [illegible] you the privilege of making such use [illegible] the facts narrated, as may, in your [illegible] judgment, promote the glory of God, and [illegible] well being of our fellow men.

It is said, you know, that we live in [illegible] age of progress and great reforms;—[illegible] great light and increased knowledge. [illegible] ferred to the rapidity with which [illegible] tellectual proficiency [illegible] of which facts, we can subscribe, and for all of which, we can can praise God; but we are also taught that this great intellectual proficiency has made equally great discoveries in the moral and religious world. It is supposed to be ascertained by many, that the truths of christianity, which, for more than eighteen centuries have been the consolation of the church of Christ, as well as the hope of the world, are now entirely worthless, and that the Scripture revelations are superceded by new and better ones given directly through Spiritual mediums, by the spirits of the departed; hence we are told that those who adhere with such tenacity to the old Bible truths, (or fables as they call them) evince to the world their stupidity and gross ignorance, and are mentally unprepared to keep pace with the times. We are told that these new revelations give larger scope to the intellect, and are promotive of a higher and purer state of morals, and that the social and domestic relations of mankind are to be so CHANGED by the Spiritual philosophy as to produce universal harmony and happiness.

Now, as I have had some years of observation and experience in the workings of this Spiritual philosophy, and being thereby fully prepared to judge of its effects, both upon myself and others, I wish for the benefit of such as may have commenced an examination of the subject, as well as those who may be either partial or full believers in it, to place before them a true and unbiassed history of my experience and observation, with an ardent wish and a fervent prayer to God that they may be profited thereby.

In presenting this history before you, I propose to refer to the great moral and religious ends proposed to be accomplished by the Spiritual philosophy; and then present the facts of my own observation and experience, showing thereby the means used for the accomplishment of the end, and leave you to judge whether those means can, by any rule of philosophy, secure the proposed end. ADELPHOS.

[The above is from one who was formerly a preacher in the M. E. Church. His articles, we trust, will be seasonable. He came into the office last Saturday, and, after conversing some time, was enabled, by the help of the Lord, to renounce Spiritualism. We bowed together in prayer, the Lord heard, answered and blessed, and he went home happy in the love of God. We met him at Chapman Hall the next day, enjoying a sweet peace of mind. Praise the Lord.—ED.]

AT CHURCH.

In time of service, seal up both thine eyes,
And send them to thine heart: that, spying sin,
They may weep out the stains by them did rise,
These doors being shut, all by the ear comes in.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in West Poland, Me., Dec. 3d, 1858, BRO. DAVID PARTRIDGE, aged 85 years.

Bro. Partridge was long a resident of Poland, being one of the first settlers of that town. He possessed naturally a strong constitution, yet he suffered much from infirmity of body. Many were the trials he had been called to pass through, among which was the loss of the companion of his youth, who died about seven years ago. Although he lived to an age beyond the com[illegible] of man, his mind was quite strong and vigorous. A few days previous to his death, I had the privilege of conversing with him, and found his hope strong in the Lord, which hope sustained him to the end. He has left a large circle of friends to mourn his loss, among whom is our Bro. Elder J. Partridge, one of the children of the deceased.

May the grace [illegible] God and his promise sustain and comfort all the sorrowing ones, is the prayer of the writer.

ERRATA IN THE DISCUSSION.—To those who have the discussion between Dr. Litch and the Editor, we would say, that on page 12, third line from the bottom, for "ten" read two. Page 15, at the end of eleventh line, read supposed instead of "suffered." Page 84, tenth line from bottom, for "reserveth," read, preserveth. Page 87, for "nah-gah," read mah-gah.

☞ We are sorry that we cannot afford the discussion for twenty-five cents; but at 37 1-2 cents we shall not get enough to pay for the first edition; the reason is, the expense of reporting, which was $90.00.

Ministerial Support.

"Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

Supporting preachers and the manner in which it should be done, or not done, has caused much contention. The ancient prophets were supported by presents. The women who heard Jesus preach, when he had not where to lay his head, ministered to him of their substance. The Phillipians once and again ministered to Paul in his necessities; and sometimes when they would have done it they lacked opportunity. Paul's own hands often ministered to his necessities and those who were with him.

After all, as God has ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel, how is it to be done? If God has ordained that they which preach should live, there is no doubt but they will be supported, though not all in one way. The hireling method is entirely unscriptural. All the Scriptures are against the men who teach for hire and divine for money. "Put me, I pray thee, into one of the priest's offices, that I may eat a piece of bread." 1 Sam. 2:36. "Not given to filthy lucre." "Not greedy of filthy lucre." "Not for filthy lucre's sake, but of a ready mind." "Teaching things they ought not for filthy lucre's sake." * * * As I understand the New Testament, the ministers were supported by the assistance of the churches and their own labor when there was need, and when their labor did not interfere with the work of preaching. There is no mention made of ministers being hired or paid by the year. This is altogether an earthly plan, and is in its nature injurious to the cause of truth. The moment this plan is adopted, the minister who favors it is apt to have the strongest call where the most is given. * * *

To me, the people called Friends come the nearest to the New Testament, in this thing, of any people I am acquainted with. As I understand their practice, they believe men are taught and moved by the Spirit of God to preach the gospel. This is my belief. When their preachers consider themselves moved by the Spirit to travel and preach, they help them from one place to another; every society having something provided for that purpose. If more than this is needed to help the preacher's family, this is done. When he returns home, he attends to his business until called again to preach.

If the churches called Christians* in the United States would adopt this method, there would be a great difference in the state of the churches, and of the ministers. In the New England States, it is a rare thing to see one of the Christian preachers traveling from town to town to preach the gospel, as they were seen fourteen years ago. What has caused this change? Two things. Some of the preachers are hired by the year, and they must stay where they are, "and accomplish as an hireling their days." Others have traveled and preached without much help, until their own wants and the wants of their families have compelled them to stay at home and work, and preach in a small circle, when they can leave their other business. Like the priests in the days of Nehemiah, the people did not bring in their sacrifices, as the law directs, and the priests left the altar, and fled into the field to obtain a living from the earth.

*This we think would apply to those called Adventists as well as to those called Christians. L.

FRANCE.

It is reported that an Anglo French fleet will leave on the 19th for the Gulf of Mexico. The French fleet will have on board a battery of Artillery, in order to oppose any enterprise of the fillibusters against Central America.

PARIS, Friday.—Montalembert writes to the Moniteur to the following effect:

"I have appealed against the sentence passed upon me. No power in France up to the present time has had a right to remit a penalty not definative. I am one of those who still believe in right, and I do not accept the pardon. I beg you, and if necessary demand you, to insert this."

A letter from Montalembert to the Archbishop of Paris, published in the Independence Belge declines the Archbishop's intercession for the remission of his penalty.

Montalembert lodged a formal appeal against the sentence on the 2d.

The Moniteur of the 3d says that competent tribunals will decide whether the appeal can, under present circumstances, be substantiated.

TURKEY.

All letters from Candia confirm the report that the agitation in Candia is increasing on account of the oppression and violence of the government. The inhabitants were buying arms and ammunition. Sami Pacha, fearing a general rising, has applied for fresh reinforcements.

ITALY.

Advices from Milan say "Great agitation is reigning here. There have been demonstrations almost similar to those which preceded the revolution of 1848. INDIA.

The Bombay mail of Nov. 9th is telegraphed from Malta. The campaign commenced on the 18th of October. The rebels have been dislodged from many strongholds. Seven engagements are reported, each resulting in a victory on the British side and heavy losses to the enemy. On the 20th the rebels were defeated near Moodpoor. On the 1st the Fort of Benoha was taken by storm. On the same day the strong fort of Birra was captured. On the 23d a detachment was assailed by five thousand rebels, but they were repulsed with the loss of men and guns. On the 29th the Fort of Nohes was taken, and on the 29th Benco Madhs, with 20,000 men, was repulsed with loss. Santia Topee was a fugitive, his forces having been routed with the loss of all their guns and 600 killed.

The number of rebels was still very large; at the lowest estimate 50,000; but they are scattered about in small bodies.

Gen. Michel has gained a fourth victory over the rebels in Central India. The rebels were led by Bandanowab.

Domestic News.

EXCITEMENT AT WASHINGTON.—WASHINGTON, Dec. 11.—The recent escape of fillibusters from Mobile excites intense interest in political quarters, as it is considered that if they shall be arrested by the British and other foreign forces, the volunteer feeling of this country would be aroused to the highest degree of excitement, and an immense reinforcement rush to their rescue. Hence a crisis in the foreign relations of our government would be precipitated, and a most angry and threatening state of things probably result between our government and those of Great Britain, France and Spain.

The question would arise whether European governments should be allowed to interfere for the regulation of affairs upon the American continent, to the prevention of which our government is committed. The Union of this morning, referring to this subject, says:

"It is to be hoped that our own naval vessels may yet succeed in interrupting the fugitive Susan, bringing her back to our ports, and preserving this fillibustering question still longer as a purely domestic one in our policy. Upon the vigilance of our officers in the waters of the Gulf may depend in a great measure the peace of the world."

THE ARRESTS AT OBERLIN.—On Tuesday the U. S. Marshal returned to Cleveland from Oberlin, where he had arrested a number of persons indicted for the fugitive slave rescue. The parties promised to come in the next day and surrender themselves. On Wednesday several of the indicted arrived in Cleveland, among them Prof. Peck, the Rev. Mr. Fitch, and others of the arrested party. Of the fugitive slaves that were indicted several had fled to parts unknown before the arrival of the Marshal.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—The Philadelphia Press of this morning says the Spanish Minister called upon Gen. Cass yesterday afternoon, and announced to him that Spain had declared war against Mexico.

NOTICES.

Notice.

A quarterly meeting conference will be holden in Viroqua, Bad Axe Co. Wis., commencing Friday, Jan. 7th, at half-past six o'clock in the evening, and continuing over the Lord's day following. Our beloved brother Levi Lyons is expected to be in attendance with the writer, to preach the word. We hope that other preaching brethren will attend that can do so. This is the first conference of the kind that has ever been holden in this place. We hope, therefore, that the dear saints will come together to this feast of tabernacles strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, filled with the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of peace, and thus be prepared to do good and get good, that God may be glorified in and by his people. Amen.

Y. HIGGINS, Evangelist.

Notice.

Our second quarterly conference of the West Central District in Maine will commence in South Livermore, near Bro. Silas Timberlake's, half a mile west of North Turner Bridge, on the first Thursday in January, 1859, and continue over Lord's day. We hope all our ministers, and as many lay brethren and sisters as consistently can, will be present, filled with the Spirit of Jesus, ready to labor for the salvation of sinners, and the encouragement of the believers. Ministers and others from other districts are cordially invited to meet with us.

I. C. WELLCOME, Scribe.
Richmond, Me., Dec. 14, 1858.

Brn., call on Silas Timberlake, David True, Elijah Soaper, Addison Campbell.

Maine Eastern Central Quarterly Conference.

This conference will be held at Round Pond, Bristol, commencing the third Thursday in January, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Ministering brethren and all others are invited to attend and labor for the salvation of sinners.

In behalf of the Church,
S. K. PARTRIDGE.

North Western Pennsylvania Conference.

A conference is appointed to meet at Blooming Valley, Crawford Co., Pa., to commence Thursday evening, Jan. 13th, 1859, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope to see a general rally of brethren and sisters from the surrounding country, and that the resolutions of the last conference will not be forgotten. JOHN T. ONGLEY,
For the Brethren.

Notice.

There will be a conference holden at South Hope, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 25th, and continuing over the Sabbath.

S. K. PARTRIDGE,
J. R. HALL.

Notice.

The third Quarterly Meeting of Military Track District will be held at Warsaw Prairie, Hancock Co., Ill., to commence Wednesday, Dec. 22d.

I would give notice to the friends in Brown Co., that I will spend a few days in the vicinity of Walker's Neck, and hold a meeting as the brethren may arrange, to commence Wednesday, Dec. 15th, at 7 P. M. Also, after our meeting at Warsaw Prairie, I will spend a few days in Missouri, as the friends may arrange. Give me notice at our Quarterly Meeting. I hope we shall see a general rally. MOSES CHANDLER, Evangelist.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

GOD WILL ARISE.

God will avenge his own,
Long has he known her moan,
But tries the gold;
That now the night is long,
Does not belie the dawn,
And as the scene is drawn,
Truth will unfold.

He will stand up at length,
Arising in His strength,
Foes quaking fall;
The conflict now is o'er,
Man's foe is known no more,
They who the burden bore,
Now take Life's all.

The watchers are awake,
Oil in their vessels take,
For day they pine;
The trump of Jubilee
Tells them of victory;
High in the heavens they see
Signs of its time.

MYSTERY OF CHASTISEMENT.

"We glory also in tribulation."—ROM. 5: 3.

Within this leaf, to every eye
So little worth, doth hidden lie
Most rare and subtle fragrancy.

Wouldst thou its secret strength unbind?
Crush it, and thou shalt perfume find,
Sweet as Arabia's spicy wind.

In this dull stone, so poor and bare
Of shape or lustre, patient care
Will find for thee a jewel rare.

But first must skillful hands essay,
With file and flint, to clear away
The film, which hides its fire from day.

This leaf? this stone? It is thy heart:
It must be crushed by pain and smart,
It must be cleansed by sorrow's art,—

Ere it will yield a fragrance sweet,
Ere it will shine a jewel meet
To lay before thy dear Lord's feet.

For the Crisis.

Christmas.

"And the angel said unto them, fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." Luke 2: 10, 11.

The day of the Savior's birth, like all other events of primitive times, has been disputed. There has, however, been but two dates at which the event was believed, by any considerable part of the Church, to have taken place, viz: the 25th of December, and the 6th of January. The former was held by the western, the latter by the eastern Church. Aside from these two general positions, we have had suggested, by different persons, every month, and almost every day in each month, as the probable date at which the event took place. The most plausible objection urged against the before mentioned dates, is the following. It is said that the event could not have occurred in December or January, because the shepherds were feeding or tending their flocks, which could not have been the case at that season of the year, it being too cold. But this objection rests upon a false assumption. St. Jerome, who lived there for years, describes its winter season as being milder than that of Rome. He says, "If it be the time of winter's cold and snow, I will buy no wood, and yet be warmer than you at Rome, whether sleeping or waking. At least I am sure I shall guard myself from cold with less fuel." Dr. Russell observes that "in Aleppo, the climate of which resembles that of Jerusalem, the most delicate never make fires till about the end of November, and some pass the whole winter without them." He resided there thirteen years, and remarks that "excepting three years, snow never lay above a day. Corn is sown during this month (December,) and the grass and herbs again springing up out of the ground after the rains, the Arabs drive their flocks [illegible] tains into the plains."

[illegible] tract, we see there is [illegible] objection urged; and even [illegible] that, in certain years, [illegible] cold in the month of [illegible] has been very mild, [illegible] at that time. The [illegible] in favor of Dec. 25. [illegible] the Roman Archives, [illegible] of Christ's nativ- [illegible] says he "was born in [illegible] the eighth before the [illegible]," (December 25.) St. [illegible] discourse preached in [illegible] 25, A. D. 386, remarks, [illegible] of the birth of Christ, "It [illegible] that he was born at the time [illegible]: and it is lawful for any one who wishes to know accurately, to search the ancient records publicly deposited at Rome, and there learn the time of that enrolment." The event of Christ's birth would not have been found in the Archives at Rome, but for the fact that it really occurred. We may rest assured that the event of Christ's birth took place on the 25th of December, the anniversary of which we call Christmas.

Having submitted thus much with regard to the time when the event of Christ's birth took place, we proceed in the next place to consider the propriety of its celebration. Why should not the birth of the Savior be regarded as a commemorable event? Men and nations celebrate the birth of their great men festively. These anniversaries are characterized by a joyfulness, an exhilaration of spirits worthy the occasion.

Now if men of the world take so much pains in, not only calling to mind, but in setting apart certain days on which the birth of their most distinguished men occurred; why should not the christian celebrate the anniversary of Christ's birth? What impropriety is there in doing this? Is it not the greatest event that ever occurred in this world's history? Is it not an event in which a world is interested? Is it not an event that should cause joy and gladness? "Behold," said the angel, "I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." This was an event which caused joy with the heavenly hosts, and hence, when it occurred, we are told that "suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." They rejoiced in anticipation of what was to be done; we, in consideration of not only what has, but of what shall be done. What glory there is clustering around the great epoch of Christ's birth! Never was there any thing like it in the whole history of man. Only for a moment consider, how this event connects itself with every human being. It matters not whether old or young, aged or middle-aged; all, all are interested in it. Had it not occurred, man would have perished, the earth been depopulated, and death been an eternal sleep. What a joyful event then was the birth of the Savior, causing all Heaven to rejoice, while old age clasped the new-born infant in his arms, exclaiming "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." Not only does joy fill the heart of the waiting ones, as the news of his birth is announced, but the treasures of gold, frankincense and myrrh, are poured forth at his feet, expressive of the gratitude and joy which filled the hearts of those who had seen the star.

What an honored spot is Bethlehem! It had been distinguished, long before, as being the place where the scene of the Book of Ruth took place. It was the birth-place of David, the king of Israel; and now made sacred by the birth of Him "Whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." The interest taken in this place, on account of its sacred associations, is testified by the thousands of pilgrims and travelers who have visited the place. Situated, as it was, about six miles from Jerusalem, how quickly the news must have reached the metropolis, spreading in every direction, engaging the heart and mind of the multitude who had long been looking for Him of whom Moses in the law and prophets did write. Its groves of almonds, its mountains and valleys, its towers and wine-presses, its rapid streams and gentle rivulets, all testify to its desirable spot. It had long before been known to the patriarchs. Jacob, especially, took an interest in the place, it being the resting-place of his beloved Rachel; who, by the prophet, is represented as weeping for her children—the slain of Bethlehem. But He, whose birth was announced by the angels, and whose subsequent birth from the dead was published by the disciples, as a pledge of future life to his people; he will raise the sleepers, and impart new life to his saints; causing a thrill of joy, which will eventuate in the celebration, on that festal morn, of the marriage of the Lamb; in comparison with which our common Christmas festivities will sink into utter insignificance.

Letters Illustrative of Christian Experience.—No. 5.

MY DEAR SISTER:—Still, as ever, complaining of your "wicked heart!" What would you think of me, were I ever complaining of my filthy dress, when I had the privilege of exchanging it for raiment pure and spotless? What would you think of me, were I constantly complaining of hunger, when before me a table was spread with an abundance of nice and nutritious food, of which I had the privilege of partaking at my pleasure? What would you say, did you see me constantly groaning beneath the weight of a heavy burden, when a friend had kindly offered at any time to relieve me [illegible] would you think of [illegible] chains, I were ever murm[illegible] dage, and wishing I were fre[illegible] knew that liberty had again and again been proffered me, and I refused to accept it? Methinks you would exclaim, "O inconsistent woman! Instead of complaining of thy defiled raiment, cast it off, and clothe thyself with the clean apparel! Cry out no longer, 'my leanness, O my leanness!' but seat thyself at the table, and feast upon the provision spread out before thee! Accept the offer of thy compassionate friend, and groan no more beneath thy heavy burden! Throw off thy chains, and go forth from thy prison free!"

Even thus, my friend, I say to thee; long, long time hast thou exclaimed, "O my wicked heart—my wicked heart!" Canst thou change thy own heart? As well might the leopard seek to change his spots! Where, then, is the remedy? Hark! an angel speaks! "Call his name JESUS, for he shall save his people from their sins." Yes, "call his name JESUS," i. e., Savior, for he saves his people from their sins. Go thou to Jesus, and be saved. His blood "cleanseth from all unrighteousness." "ALL"—not a part—but "ALL unrighteousness." It matters not what be thy easily besetting sin, nor yet how great thy guilt; for if upon thy poor heart were laid the sins of the whole world, except it be the sin against the Holy Ghost, which is never forgiven, the blood of Jesus Christ could cleanse it all away, and thy soul be made pure and white as snow.

It seems, from what you say in your letter, that you are constantly striving against the inclinations of your own heart, your tendency to do evil; you are evidently struggling more for victory, than rejoicing in victory. You are not the free and rejoicing christian, who, with firm step, manly courage and unwavering faith, pursues the narrow path, turning neither to the right hand nor to the left, but in hope presses on to the attainment of the prize.

You attend upon the ordinances of the sanctuary, but you are not an active christian. You partake of the emblems of Christ's death, but you do not by faith partake of his Divine nature. You pray in secret, but do not have near access to God; you do not enter within the holy of holies, and hold sweet and intimate communion with your heavenly Father. The fear of man closes your lips, so that no public testimony is given for Christ, and brings you into such a snare, that you avoid every cross which brings with it peculiarity or reproach. Thus you live day after day, vainly striving to wed the service of Christ with the pleasures and honors of the world, desiring the love of both—the approval of both.

By baptism and union with the church, you have manifested a disposition to be numbered among Christ's disciples; but, by your conformity to the world, you have also manifested a disposition to be in affinity also with that. I speak plainly; my love for your soul prompts me to faithful dealing. "Hear ye the word of the Lord." "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." "Be not conformed to this world." "The friendship of this world is emnity against God; whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." My dear sister, do pause and think well of these searching truths. Mark the last named, reckoning all those who are in friendship with the world as the enemies of God. Christ has chosen his people out from the world, and he says they are not of it, even as he is not of the world. Deceive not your own heart with a mere "form of godliness;" it avails nothing without the "power."

And now, dear sister, let me in conclusion urge upon you the duty of renouncing the world fully—of consecrating yourself to God entirely—of believing on Christ unwaveringly, and loving him perfectly. When you do this, I shall no longer find you exclaiming, "My wicked heart—my wicked heart!" No longer will you shun the consecrated cross—no longer complain of leanness and barrenness—no longer fear to speak for Jesus; but, with a heart from sin made free, and filled with peace and joy, you will run the race set before you with alacrity and delight.

Yours in love, M. D. W.

What do Ye imagine against the Lord?

BRO. GRANT:—I find the above question asked in the first chapter of Nahum, at the 9th verse. I have often queried why such [illegible] so in this case, for it appears that the prophet asks the question himself, for the sake of answering it; therefore we are admonished to give heed to it, because the answer to the question is of vital importance to all who study the Scriptures to know the truths they teach, and we are also to understand, that the prophet was moved by the Holy Ghost, to ask and answer the above question. 2 Pet. 1: 21.

And we are also further to understand, that when the Holy Spirit moves upon one prophet to make a declaration, that it never moves upon any other being, whether celestial or terrestrial, to declare any thing to the contrary. Therefore God's word is not, yea and nay, but yea and amen.

There is one thing we wish to ascertain, and that is, what it was that people imagined against the Lord. Does not the language of the answer warrant us in believing that there were people in the prophet's day, as well as now, that imagined that God will punish the wicked with eternal torment? It appears so to me, for the prophet gives such imagination a plain contradiction, by saying, "He (God) will make an utter end: affliction shall not rise up the second time: for while they be folden together as thorns, and while they are drunken as drunkards, they shall be devoured as stubble fully dry." Can language any stronger be used against the endless suffering of the wicked? Yet some are not satisfied with this positive declaration, and will search to find something that will do it away; but they search in vain. Are not such people somewhat like Balaam, who, after God had positively said, "thou shalt not go with them: (the servants of Balak) thou shalt not curse the people: for they are blessed," Num. 22: 12, yet we find was not satisfied, and by Balak importuning him, went to the Lord again, to see if he would not say something different; and we find, by reading, what success he had. And those that search to see if God has not said something, somewhere, that will militate against the answer to the above question, will have no better success than had Balaam.

But, say some, I read in Rev. 14: 11,—"And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever!" This text proves that God has not made an utter end of them, and affliction does rise up the second time. And by thus inferring that forever and ever has no end, they are willing to take the ground of the infidel, that the word of God contradicts itself. Let all such turn and read (Ex. 21: 6,) about a servant that refused to go out free at the year of release, who was to have his "ear bored through with an awl: and he shall serve him (his master) forever." I ask, do you believe that that servant is to serve that master beyond the resurrection? if not, your imagination is unfounded. Again, Matt. 25: 46.—"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." Let all those that "imagine" that punishment is a conscious eternal suffering in misery, read 2 Thess. 1: 9, 10. Paul, speaking of the same event, says, they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction," &c.

Dear brethren, may God enable us to believe his word, and not imagine anything against the Lord, that shall impeach his glorious and lovely character, who has said that "he will not contend forever, neither will I be always wroth!" although he "is now angry with the wicked every day." O! sinner, why will you not repent, and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, that you may obtain eternal life? "for the wages of sin is death."

JOHN GIBSON.

A Receipt

For Christians who complain that their religious paper grows uninteresting.

Sit down immediately and write the best article you are capable of. As we are commanded by high authority to "seek to edify one another,"—choose a subject you think the best calculated to edify; clothe it with the best language of which you are master; and if you only write enough to fill one column of a common newspaper, you will find it is more like labor than you had thought. Send it immediately to your editor, and when it comes out fairly printed, compare it with those articles you thought so insipid, common place, etc., and see how far it eclipses them in point [illegible] and if by this time you [illegible] scribers and yourself, really think a new interest is added to the paper, why then it is plain you ought to be a helper instead of a complainer.

Try it and see if this is not the diagnosis of your moral dyspepsia,—not having labored sufficiently to gain a healthy appetite,—hence you are dainty, because disordered, and will only pick here and there a sweetmeat. Then, as for Therapeutics, I would recommend labor, labor, LABOR!! For I have noticed this effect follows this cause; those who labor most, complain the least, and vice versa; whether it be in helping forward a religious paper, the prayer meeting, or sustaining any other religious interest. "The LABORERS are seldom complainers."

Eastern Tour.

BRO. GRANT:—I spent most of the month of Nov. down East, on the Penobscot. I visited and preached in Holden, Bradley, Bangor and Hermon, and I found a few who still love to hear the everlasting Gospel. I attended a conference of days at Holden. Brn. Smith and Damman were with us, to assist in preaching the word; and although the weather was cold and stormy, there was a good attendance, and the word did seem to do them good. Every thing went on well. There was a spirit of reformation in the meeting, and harmony did prevail. There was some talk about foreordination and election; but believing that ALL ARE CALLED, and chosen by sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth, elected by faith and obedience; therefore we urged all to double their diligence, to make their calling and election sure; also assuring ALL that the old gospel fountain was still open; that the Spirit and the bride were saying "come," and that whosoever would might come to the fountain and take the water of life freely.

We find a few of the original faith who love all the signs and indications of our Lord's coming, and nothing but the gospel that brings the sleepers out of their graves, and rewards them with life eternal at Christ's coming, will satisfy. Not believing that good men go to Heaven, or get their reward when they die, they look forward with interest to the time when all that are in their graves shall come forth to receive for the deeds done in the body, whether good or bad,—when "they who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor, immortality, eternal life!" While "they who are contentious and obey not the truth, but obey unrighteousness, indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil."

They consider it all important to receive into good and honest hearts the love of the truth, so as to be guarded against that seductive, damnable deception, now spreading itself in every direction, seeking to deceive, if possible, the very elect.

I labored under great disability while with them; but by their kindness I was able to attend meeting most of the time. If more constant preaching of the right kind could be had among them, there would be glorious results. They, as well as all, need and must have the truth adapted to the present time; this, mixed with experimental, living religion, will give a man joy unspeakable and full of glory, and will exert a saving influence on those that are without hope.

The meetings were good, and many of the brethren are still much interested, and love to do all they can to help the toil-worn pilgrim on his way. The Lord revive his work among them is my prayer, and reward them, and help them to still look for and love the appearing of our Lord.

In Persia [illegible] one of them addressed a Christian missionary in these affecting words:—"I have traveled far; the Jews are every where princes in comparison with those in the land of Iran. Heavy is our captivity, heavy is our burden, heavy is our slavery; anxiously we wait for redemption."

History, says an eloquent writer, is [illegible] record of the past; it presumes not to raise the mysterious [illegible] will be clearly vindicated. This, however, we may venture to assert, that true religion will advance with dissemination of sound knowledge. The more enlightened the Jew becomes, the more incredible will it appear to him that the gracious Father of the whole human race intended an exclusive faith, a creed confined to one family to be permanent; and the more evident also will it appear to him that a religion which embraces within the sphere of its benevolence all the kindreds and languages of the earth, is alone adapted to an improved and civilized age.

We presume not to expound the signs of the times, nor to see further than we are led by the course of events; but it is impossible not to be struck with the aspect of the grandest of all moral phenomena, which is suspended upon the history and actual conditon of the sons of Jacob. At this moment they are nearly as numerous as when David swayed the scepter of the twelve tribes; their expectations are the same; and on whatever part of the earth's surface they have their abode, their eyes and their faith are all pointed in the same direction—to the land of their fathers, and the holy city where their fathers worshipped. Though persecuted by man, they have not once, during eighteen hundred long years, ceased to repose confidence in the promises made by Jehovah to the founders of their nation; and although the heart has often been sick, and the spirit faint, they have never relinquished the hope of that bright reversion in the latter day, which is once more to establish the Lord's house on the top of the mountains, and to make Jerusalem the glory of the whole world.—*Philadelphia U. FLATTERY.—Men who praise you to your face, are ever to be suspected. The Italians have a very expressive proverb on this subject: "He who caresses you more than he was wont to do, has either deceived you, or is about to do it." I have never known the sentiment in this proverb to fail.—Adam Clarke.

The Late Discussion.

When I wrote my first article in relation to the above, I had no other object in view than expressing candidly my thoughts upon the result of the debate, as I understood and appreciated it. I did not seek to give an unfair bias to the minds of those who were not present, as I would thus be guilty of a disingenuousness sadly at variance with the character which I profess.

It is not my object, at present, to review the discussion, which every one may read for himself, if he be so disposed; as I would not affect to make the subject plainer than it has been already set forth; but I feel bound, not only by the honor of a man, but by the awful responsibility which I incur in taking a position in this truly momentous question, to state truthfully, and as briefly as possible, the reason for changing my views.

It is scarcely necessary to refer to the providential circumstances which led me into the bosom of the church in Boston, as the readers of this paper are acquainted with them. When I first heard the doctrine of the non-existence of a soul in man, I thought and proclaimed it infidelity in its worst sense, as I believed it but a step removed from gaunt Atheism, which repudiates the being of a God; and all my religious feelings and sympathies arose antagonistic to it. I thought that any one professing to be governed by the Bible, could not for a moment sustain such grounds; but with alarm I saw that which I believed invulnerable, pierced through at all points, and the sombre mysticism, which enveloped my creed, rent from top to bottom. At first I endeavored to treat it with contempt, and called that altering of a comma a miserable subterfuge to evade the point-blank, "palpable hit" of a home thrust. Then the parable of Dives and Lazarus, which I brought forth as unanswerable, was laid up with perfect sang froid. Every inch of ground I contested foot to foot, hand to hand, with all my might; but alas for my "antiquated superstition!" I was forced to the reasonable conclusion that immortality in man is not inherent; but a gift of God, through Jesus Christ, "to them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." Rom. 2: 7.

[illegible] thus far convinced that mankind

years ago discussed, but invariably I took the side of the affirmative; not that I was convinced of its justice; I trembled to contemplate the unspeakable doom, yet dared not question the right of Jehovah to do his pleasure. But, when I ventured to investigate the gloomy theory which made the God of love a more horrid being than Moloch, my heart leaped eagerly to catch the truth, that He whom the christians worship is perfect.

Before the late discussion commenced, I made it a subject of prayer that if the tenets which I had recently embraced were unscriptural, I might see my way more clearly; and further, I resolved that, if the opinions which some hold were substantiated in the coming debate, I would retract upon the spot. It was with the most absorbing interest that I listened to Dr. Litch, as he ably opened the discussion. My feelings were largely with him as he rehearsed those opinions which I had imbibed almost at my mother's bosom. There is nothing more difficult to overcome than early religious prejudices; and I must confess that the speaker's voice and words brought sad and endearing memories.

But the answer—the negative—came, and Truth, Justice, THE BIBLE, laid prostrate every mouldy tradition which maligned the character of God, and when the discussion closed, my heart seemed relieved of a mighty load, and involuntarily I exclaimed, "Thank God! at last I'm satisfied." I have since attentively read the debate, and find nothing therein to alter my opinion. It was truly mortifying to hear one resort to "ghost stories" to uphold his position on such an awful subject; and were the question not too grave to permit a smile, we might well indulge in one to see with what industry the disciples of "antiquated superstition" dig up old paths to thrust them in the breach which a "well served gospel" made. When Luther preached against indulgences and other flagrant errors of the Romish church, what a cloud of dust was raised by clashing together the ponderous tomes of legendary lore! and the cardinals and priests, like so many huge cuttle-fish, mudded the water; but neither dust or mud could hide the precious truth from the eager eyes of those who sought it. Not much over an hundred years ago, "good men and true" gravely devoted old women to the flames as witches, if they happened to have long noses, or became obnoxious to some hypocondriac: but such acts would very likely be called "murder" at the present day.

I would as soon cite Shakspeare for authority as many of the old yarns brought up to substantiate the "ghost" institution. And indeed the veritable "Will" is rich in such scenes. For instance, where the murdered king appears and makes himself known to Hamlet, his son:—

"I am thy father's spirit,
Doomed for a certain term to walk the night,
And for the day confined to fast in fire,
Till the foul crimes done in my days of nature
Are burnt and purged away."

Here are spirits and purgatorial fire with a vengeance. Again when Mark Anthony, half apostrophising, half in soliloquy over the bleeding body of his friend, enumerating in prophecy all the calamities which would follow the assasination, says in conclusion:

"All pity choaked with custom of fell deeds,
And Cæsar's spirit raging for revenge,
With Ate by his side, come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines with a monarch's voice
Cry havoc! and let slip the dogs of war."

And this differs but little from the theology which I most heartily condemn, and which I shall lend a hand to overthrow. And here I would say that did I rehearse the articles of my belief, three would stand out clear and well defined, grounded and settled in my heart and conscience, after an unimpassioned and candid examination, and these are,

First, Redemption through our Lord Jesus Christ.

[illegible], Immortality only through a

Forth shall he come aghast and in despair
To meet the furious tempest of his doom.
The blood-red sword of retribution stern
Flashes afar o'er his devoted head,
Which he would gladly hide.—"DEPART!"
It is the knell of everlasting death,
From which no resurrection e'er shall call
The hapless dead. Then shall the ransomed saints
High in the air behold the world on fire;
And when the renovated earth appears
All fresh and pure, and blooming as at first,
They shall receive it as their promised land,
While in the boundless universe of God,
Remain no pain, no cry, or lingering mark of sin.

THE LOOM OF LIFE.

We're sitting at the loom of life,
Our final garments weaving;
And when before Heaven's bar we stand,
For one last, dread revealing,
Within his holy presence there,
We then this self-wrought robe must wear.

Time's busy, never-tiring hand,
How swiftly flings the shuttle!
And what the fabric it shall weave
Our course of life must settle.
Oh! what shall then the garment be
That robes us in eternity!

Shall selfish pleasure sway our hearts,
And govern every passion?
And worldly pride and hoarded wealth
Our final garments fashion?
While suffering sorrow pleads in vain
From our full hand one single grain?

Or shall a deep heart-sympathy
And sacrifice of pleasure,
Weave in our robes their golden threads,
A never-failing treasure?
That noble deeds of love and care
May weave their beauteous traces there?

Help us, "Great Author" of our lives,
To use the "warp" thou'st given,
And weave us garments that may deck
Th' imperial courts of heaven;
That when we at thy bar appear,
The "wedding garment" we may wear.

For the Crisis.

The Advent Impending.

For a length of time it has been a matter of deep interest with me to ascertain the evidence upon which is based the prevalent and increasing belief, amongst the brethren, that the coming of the Lord is not an event immediately impending. As I have succeeded in obtaining the principal arguments for this belief, I take the liberty of communicating them, through the Crisis, to the scattered flock, hoping, that through the blessing of the Lord, some may be led to correct the errors into which they may have fallen, and thereby escape the dangers to which such views are tending.

In a conversation recently had with an intelligent christian brother upon the subject, who, when hard pushed, honestly admitted he knew of no positive proof in favor of this belief, but in his own case, and in others, supposed it the result of the earnest promulgation of the following and kindred sentiments or doctrines:

1. That Russia is the true king of the north of Dan. 11: 40, and is yet to overflow the Turkish empire—to subjugate Europe, and then to be attracted to the mountains of Israel, as the Gog and Magog of Ezekiel; by the great riches of the unwalled villages, yet to be built by restored Israel in the flesh. In order to accommodate this theory, it is assumed that the 2300 days ended about 1844,—that the 1260 in 1798, the 1290 in 1828, and the 1335 will end in about 1873. To all who entertain this view, I would ask of you what event occurred in 1828 that marks the ending of the 1290 period, or what occurred in 1844, or since, that answers to the "cleansing of the sanctuary?" Or where is the evidence to be found in the "sacred word," that Israel is to be restored in any sense before Christ the restorer comes?

2. That the prophesying of the two witnesses, "in sack cloth," of Rev. 11th, is in the future, and will be fulfilled by the literal appearing of Moses and Elias, (or persons of like spirit,) who are to prophesy at Jerusalem 1260 literal days, then to be literally killed, and after three and a half days resurrected, and caught up personally to heaven. That this killing will be accomplished by some desolating [illegible] yet to arise and exercise universal [illegible] period, &c. That when these events transpire at Jerusalem THEN the saints may know that the coming of the Lord "is nigh even at the doors."

3. That France is to become the antitypical two-horned beast of Rev. 13: 11–18. To do which, she must yet restore the papal head, "wounded," "killed by a sword, and carried into captivity" by Napoleon I., near the close of the last century, and cause it "to live again," and exercise all the power possessed by papal Rome in her palmy days, which was dominion over the prophetic world.

4. That Spiritualism is yet to revolutionize the civil and ecclesiastical world,—to attain universal power, and fulfill all that the Scriptures ascribe to the two-horned beast.

5. That the United States is the two-horned beast, and is yet to be developed as such. That six of the seven vials of Rev. 16th are to be poured out, literally, and that the keeping of the seventh day Sabbath will so interfere with the business affairs of the world, as to bring upon them (the Sabbatarians) a bloody persecution.

6. That the papacy is once more to attain universal dominion, and again to persecute the saints as in ancient times.

7. That the darkening of the sun and of the moon, the falling of the stars, as taught by Christ, and also the midnight cry, are all events in the future, &c. &c.

All the various arguments within my reach, put forth to sustain these and other theories of the kind, I have carefully examined and duly considered, and am constrained to say I have found them defective, and tending to evil, by lulling the minds of the saints of God into a state of security not warranted by the word of the Lord, and therefore dangerous.

And now I wish to inquire, how can these theories be correct, or harmonized with the established connection between the 8th and 9th chapters of Daniel, which require years for their accomplishment? Or, where is the authority for the extension of the 1335 days for such purposes? It does appear to me, that a proper respect for, or confidence in, God's measurement and interpretation of the vision which he gave to his servant Daniel, containing the promise—"the wise shall understand," should lead us all to be exceedingly cautious about adopting and promulgating theories which conflict therewith. For my own part, I must say my confidence remains unshaken in the vision, as well as in other portions of the prophetic scriptures; and I think that there is safety only in a constant preparation and watchfulness for the return of our long absent Lord. Evidence to my mind clearly justifies this position.

Before closing I will suggest one thought, on a part of the 7th verse of the 12th of Daniel, which reads thus,—"And when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be accomplished." The term "to scatter" I understand in the sense to weaken or make powerless, and is among the last trials of the church, to teach her to cease from man, and trust alone in the living God and the words of his grace. Is not this multiplication of new doctrines fulfilling this passage? P. ALLING.

Norwalk, O., Dec. 1858.

THE TONGUE.—Give your tongue to be governed by wisdom and piety. Let it not be as a thorny bush, pricking and hurting those that are about you—nor altogether a barren tree, yielding nothing; but a fruitful tree, as Solomon calls the tongue of the righteous, "a tree of life to your neighbor." Let your heart be possessed with those two excellent graces, humility and charity, and then with your tongue you will not be in danger of hurting others. It may help you too to the right using, and often to the not using of your tongue, to remember that God hath said, "If any man seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, that man's religion is vain."

☞ Refrain from bitter words; there is only the difference of a letter between words and swords.

For the Crisis.

The Literal and Figurative Interpretation of Scripture.

"We have not followed cunningly devised fables;" is a most remarkable assertion of the Apostle, if so be the Bible is to be interpreted in a mystical and figurative sense; and not according to its plain, literal, and grammatical construction, as any other book. All human language is of necessity figurative; and this is especially the case in the most ancient eastern nations, the Hebrew, Greek, and Syriac languages. There is no difficulty in understanding these metaphors, symbols, figures, or allegories, and no danger of taking them literally; from the very fact that they will not bear a literal construction, without involving an absurdity, or contradiction to nature. When we speak of the "eyelids of the morning," there is no fear of any one being silly enough to think that the morning has great ogling eyes, that open at the peep of day, and close again at night. The language of Christ at the supper, "this is my body, this is my blood," could never have been understood literally, had not a crafty priesthood tried to impose a miracle on the credulous multitude, to advance their own power and authority. The literal interpretation of such language as this, is both loathsome and disgusting, and fit only for the sensual ideas of a cannibal. But while some are guilty of converting fables into facts, to suit their own purpose, are not others, for the same reason, too often disposed to turn facts into fables?

Origen was the great father of what is now termed the "Spiritual interpretation of Scripture;" there were some doctrines of the gospel that did not accommodate themselves to his taste and prejudices; how to get rid of them he did not know; till his futile brain devised the plan of turning any unsavory truth into a mystical allegory, or fable; others have followed in his wake, so that in the present day, nearly the whole of the Bible is, by some one or another, turned into a book of cunningly devised fables and eastern metaphors. Any one may see, at a glance, that this mode of interpreting Scripture is most unsafe and uncertain; leaving it to every one's imagination and fancy to twist and torture the word of God to suit their own selfish and sectarian purposes.

Is it any wonder, under this system, that the christian church is divided into so many sects and parties, and all profess to take the Bible as the rule of their faith, as they choose to understand it, and not according to its literal meaning. If men were to use any other book with the same liberty of interpretation as they do the Scriptures, they would be considered fit inmates of a lunatic asylum; and we certainly need an infallible interpreter, quite as much or more, than an infallible text, and we must go back to Rome to find one, before we can arrive at any certainty with regard to a single article of christian faith, if this system is the true one. If even our own commentators would abide by their own rules of interpretation, we should not have half the difficulty we now have; but these rules are like some men's promises, made only to be broken the first opportunity. They tell us, that "all scripture is to be taken literally; if it will bear a literal interpretation without involving an absurdity, or contradicting any plain and clear doctrine of God's word."

Now let us see how they abide by their own rules, in an instance or two. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." This text, according to its literal meaning, is as plain and clear as the sun at noonday—death is the penalty of sin, eternal life can only be obtained as a gift of God, through faith in Christ, the author and giver of life. Does this involve any absurdity? Does it contradict one single passage in the Bible? Not one. Hundreds of texts corroborate the truth, that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die;" that none but those who love and serve God shall have eternal life; nothing can possibly be made more plain and clear than this uniform testimony of Scripture, from Genesis to Revelations. But how do our learned divines explain this passage? They fly directly in the face of their own rules of interpretation, by denying the literal interpretation of the text, without attempting to prove its absurdity, or disagreement with any other passage in the word of God. They deny that death, the extinction of being, is the penalty of sin, and substitute eternal torment in its place. They deny that eternal life is the gift of God through Christ; and affirm that all men are immortal, but they give no proof of this assertion, and tell us it is to be taken for granted, merely from inference! It is just as easy to prove the opposite to this by inference; and indeed to prove any thing in the same way; but for the immortality of all men, in opposition to the express declarations of Scripture, that "all the wicked God will destroy," we certainly need something more than inference.

The personal reign of Christ on earth, is as clearly foretold as his sufferings and death; but while we are obliged to take the latter according to the letter, because it has been so fulfilled; we take the liberty of interpreting the former to be a spiritual reign, and a spiritual kingdom! Thus the truth of God's word is spirited away by the traditions of men, and made of none effect.

Is it any wonder that people reject the Bible as a revelation from God, and are left to wander without a guide on the dark mountains of infidelity, when those who profess to be the authorized teachers of religion, thus pervert, misrepresent, and mystify the only true light that God has given us, in this dark world of sin and death; and thus darken counsel by words without knowledge?"

It is this evil spirit of spiritualising every thing to suit our own preconceived opinions, that has caused men to say, till it has almost become a proverb, that "the Bible is like an old fiddle, that you can play on it any tune you please." When the adversary could no longer play his old game of making the Bible a forbidden book to the people, he has changed his policy, and now permits them to read it; but it must only be read through the many-colored spectacles of orthodox creeds, and sectarian prejudice! And if any one dares to be so singular as to use his own eyes in preference to those of other men, he is at once denounced as an heretic and an infidel!

But see the inconsistency of these commentators of Scripture; while they spiritualize and mystify many plain and literal facts, and turn them into fables, they will, at times, jump over to the opposite extreme, and make that literal; that, to all intents and purposes, cannot bear a literal interpretation without an absurdity, or at least a contradiction to truths plainly revealed.

One instance of this has been already noticed in the literal interpretation of the words of Christ, "this is my body, &c." We notice one more of the same nature, in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus; this is first acknowledged to be a parable, and then immediately denied, by substituting a literal interpretation which is a manifest absurdity to all but those who are wilfully blind. If it is a parable, it will not bear a literal interpretation; if it is an history of facts, they are surely stranger than fiction, and require no little credulity to digest them. On the same principle we may prove that trees and shrubs possess reason, language, and a system of government by a literal interpretation of the parable in the Old Testament, of the trees choosing a king over them.

When will people be willing to [illegible] the will of God, to seek after truth, sit at the feet of Jesus, as Mary [illegible] not come with the head stuffed [illegible] losophy and vain deceit, or [illegible] strive to proselyte the [illegible] self-conceived opinions of [illegible] mortals, who are but of [illegible] know nothing?

That can lasting fragrance give;
Those who seek to find them may;
And they'll cluster round the way,
As we are traveling to the tomb,
Throwing brightness o'er the gloom,—
Religion, truth, and virtue pure,
Are fadeless flowers that e'er endure.

The Late Discussion.

When I wrote my first article in relation to the above, I had no other object in view than expressing candidly my thoughts upon the result of the debate, as I understood and appreciated it. I did not seek to give an unfair bias to the minds of those who were not present, as I would thus be guilty of a disingenuousness sadly at variance with the character which I profess.

It is not my object, at present, to review the discussion, which every one may read for himself, if he be so disposed; as I would not affect to make the subject plainer than it has been already set forth; but I feel bound, not only by the honor of a man, but by the awful responsibility which I incur in taking a position in this truly momentous question, to state truthfully, and as briefly as possible, the reason for changing my views.

It is scarcely necessary to refer to the providential circumstances which led me into the bosom of the church in Boston, as the readers of this paper are acquainted with them. When I first heard the doctrine of the non-existence of a soul in man, I thought and proclaimed it infidelity in its worst sense, as I believed it but a step removed from gaunt Atheism, which repudiates the being of a God; and all my religious feelings and sympathies arose antagonistic to it. I thought that any one professing to be governed by the Bible, could not for a moment sustain such grounds; but with alarm I saw that which I believed invulnerable, pierced through at all points, and the sombre mysticism, which enveloped my creed, rent from top to bottom. At first I endeavored to treat it with contempt, and called that altering of a comma a miserable subterfuge to evade the point-blank, "palpable hit" of a home thrust. Then the parable of Dives and Lazarus, which I brought forth as unanswerable, was laid up with perfect sang froid. Every inch of ground I contested foot to foot, hand to hand, with all my might; but alas for my "antiquated superstition!" I was forced to the reasonable conclusion that immortality in man is not inherent; but a gift of God, through Jesus Christ, "to them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." Rom. 2: 7.

Being thus far convinced that mankind [illegible] years ago discussed, but invariably I took the side of the affirmative; not that I was convinced of its justice; I trembled to contemplate the unspeakable doom, yet dared not question the right of Jehovah to do his pleasure. But, when I ventured to investigate the gloomy theory which made the God of love a more horrid being than Moloch, my heart leaped eagerly to catch the truth, that He whom the christians worship is perfect.

Before the late discussion commenced, I made it a subject of prayer that if the tenets which I had recently embraced were unscriptural, I might see my way more clearly; and further, I resolved that, if the opinions which some held were substantiated in the coming debate, I would retract upon the spot. It was with the most absorbing interest that I listened to Dr. Litch, as he ably opened the discussion. My feelings were largely with him as he rehearsed those opinions which I had imbibed almost at my mother's bosom. There is nothing more difficult to overcome than early religious prejudices; and I must confess that the speaker's voice and words brought sad and endearing memories.

But the answer—the negative—came, and Truth, Justice, THE BIBLE, laid prostrate every mouldy tradition which maligned the character of God, and when the discussion closed, my heart seemed relieved of a mighty load, and involuntarily I exclaimed, "Thank God! at last I'm satisfied." I have since attentively read the debate, and find nothing therein to alter my opinion. It was truly mortifying to hear one resort to "ghost stories" to uphold his position on such an awful subject; and were the question not too grave to permit a smile, we might well indulge in one to see with what industry the disciples of "antiquated superstition" dig up old paths to thrust them in the breach which a "well served gospel" made. When Luther preached against indulgences and other flagrant errors of the Romish church, what a cloud of dust was raised by clashing together the ponderous tomes of legendary lore! and the cardinals and priests, like so many huge cuttle-fish, mudded the water; but neither dust or mud could hide the precious truth from the eager eyes of those who sought it. Not much over an hundred years ago, "good men and true" gravely devoted old women to the flames as witches, if they happened to have long noses, or became obnoxious to some hypocondriac: but such acts would very likely be called "murder" at the present day.

I would as soon cite Shakspeare for authority as many of the old yarns brought up to substantiate the "ghost" institution. And indeed the veritable "Will" is rich in such scenes. For instance, where the murdered king appears and makes himself known to Hamlet, his son:—

"I am thy father's spirit,
Doomed for a certain term to walk the night,
And for the day confined to fast in fire,
Till the foul crimes done in my days of nature
Are burnt and purged away."

Here are spirits and purgatorial fire with a vengeance. Again when Mark Anthony, half apostrophising, half in soliloquy over the bleeding body of his friend, enumerating in prophecy all the calamities which would follow the assasination, says in conclusion:

"All pity choaked with custom of fell deeds,
And Cæsar's spirit raging for revenge,
With Ate by his side, come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines with a monarch's voice
Cry havoc! and let slip the dogs of war."

And this differs but little from the theology which I most heartily condemn, and which I shall lend a hand to overthrow. And here I would say that did I rehearse the articles of my belief, three would stand out clear and well defined, grounded and settled in my heart and conscience, after an unimpassioned and candid examination, and these are,

First, Redemption through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Second, Immortality only through a

[illegible]

Forth shall he come aghast and in despair
To meet the furious tempest of his doom.
The blood-red sword of retribution stern
Flashes afar o'er his devoted head,
Which he would gladly hide.—"DEPART!"
It is the knell of everlasting death,
From which no resurrection e'er shall call
The hapless dead. Then shall the ransomed saints
High in the air behold the world on fire;
And when the renovated earth appears
All fresh and pure, and blooming as at first,
They shall receive it as their promised land,
While in the boundless universe of God,
Remain no pain, no cry, or lingering mark of sin.

THE LOOM OF LIFE.

We're sitting at the loom of life,
Our final garments weaving;
And when before Heaven's bar we stand,
For one last, dread revealing,
Within his holy presence there,
We then this self-wrought robe must wear.

Time's busy, never-tiring hand,
How swiftly flings the shuttle!
And what the fabric it shall weave
Our course of life must settle.
Oh! what shall then the garment be
That robes us in eternity!

Shall selfish pleasure sway our hearts,
And govern every passion?
And worldly pride and hoarded wealth
Our final garments fashion?
While suffering sorrow pleads in vain
From our full hand one single grain?

Or shall a deep heart-sympathy
And sacrifice of pleasure,
Weave in our robes their golden threads,
A never-failing treasure?
That noble deeds of love and care
May weave their beauteous traces there?

Help us, "Great Author" of our lives,
To use the "warp" thou'st given,
And weave us garments that may deck
Th' imperial courts of heaven;
That when we at thy bar appear,
The "wedding garment" we may wear.

For the Crisis.

The Advent Impending.

For a length of time it has been a matter of deep interest with me to ascertain the evidence upon which is based the prevalent and increasing belief, amongst the brethren, that the coming of the Lord is not an event immediately impending. As I have succeeded in obtaining the principal arguments for this belief, I take the liberty of communicating them, through the Crisis, to the scattered flock, hoping, that through the blessing of the Lord, some may be led to correct the errors into which they may have fallen, and thereby escape the dangers to which such views are tending.

In a conversation recently had with an intelligent christian brother upon the subject, who, when hard pushed, honestly admitted he knew of no positive proof in favor of this belief, but in his own case, and in others, supposed it the result of the earnest promulgation of the following and kindred sentiments or doctrines:

1. That Russia is the true king of the north of Dan. 11: 40, and is yet to overflow the Turkish empire—to subjugate Europe, and then to be attracted to the mountains of Israel, as the Gog and Magog of Ezekiel; by the great riches of the unwalled villages, yet to be built by restored Israel in the flesh. In order to accommodate this theory, it is assumed that the 2300 days ended about 1844,—that the 1260 in 1798, the 1290 in 1828, and the 1335 will end in about 1873. To all who entertain this view, I would ask of you what event occurred in 1828 that marks the ending of the 1290 period, or what occurred in 1844, or since, that answers to the "cleansing of the sanctuary?" Or where is the evidence to be found in the "sacred word," that Israel is to be restored in any sense before Christ the restorer comes?

2. That the prophesying of the two witnesses, "in sack cloth," of Rev. 11th, is in the future, and will be fulfilled by the literal appearing of Moses and Elias, (or persons of like spirit,) who are to prophesy at Jerusalem 1260 literal days, then to be literally killed, and after three and a half days resurrected, and caught up personally to heaven. That this killing will be accomplished by some desolating [illegible] yet to arise and exercise universal [illegible] brief period, &c. That when these events transpire at Jerusalem THEN the saints may know that the coming of the Lord "is nigh even at the doors."

3. That France is to become the antitypical two-horned beast of Rev. 13: 11–18. To do which, she must yet restore the papal head, "wounded," "killed by a sword, and carried into captivity" by Napoleon I., near the close of the last century, and cause it "to live again," and exercise all the power possessed by papal Rome in her palmy days, which was dominion over the prophetic world.

4. That Spiritualism is yet to revolutionize the civil and ecclesiastical world,—to attain universal power, and fulfill all that the Scriptures ascribe to the two-horned beast.

5. That the United States is the two-horned beast, and is yet to be developed as such. That six of the seven vials of Rev. 16th are to be poured out, literally, and that the keeping of the seventh day Sabbath will so interfere with the business affairs of the world, as to bring upon them (the Sabbatarians) a bloody persecution.

6. That the papacy is once more to attain universal dominion, and again to persecute the saints as in ancient times.

7. That the darkening of the sun and of the moon, the falling of the stars, as taught by Christ, and also the midnight cry, are all events in the future, &c. &c.

All the various arguments within my reach, put forth to sustain these and other theories of the kind, I have carefully examined and duly considered, and am constrained to say I have found them defective, and tending to evil, by lulling the minds of the saints of God into a state of security not warranted by the word of the Lord, and therefore dangerous.

And now I wish to inquire, how can these theories be correct, or harmonized with the established connection between the 8th and 9th chapters of Daniel, which require years for their accomplishment? Or, where is the authority for the extension of the 1335 days for such purposes? It does appear to me, that a proper respect for, or confidence in, God's measurement and interpretation of the vision which he gave to his servant Daniel, containing the promise—"the wise shall understand," should lead us all to be exceedingly cautious about adopting and promulgating theories which conflict therewith. For my own part, I must say my confidence remains unshaken in the vision, as well as in other portions of the prophetic scriptures; and I think that there is safety only in a constant preparation and watchfulness for the return of our long absent Lord. Evidence to my mind clearly justifies this position.

Before closing I will suggest one thought, on a part of the 7th verse of the 12th of Daniel, which reads thus,—"And when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be accomplished." The term "to scatter" I understand in the sense to weaken or make powerless, and is among the last trials of the church, to teach her to cease from man, and trust alone in the living God and the words of his grace. Is not this multiplication of new doctrines fulfilling this passage?

THE TONGUE.—Give your tongue to be governed by wisdom and piety. Let it not be as a thorny bush, pricking and hurting those that are about you—nor altogether a barren tree, yielding nothing; but a fruitful tree, as Solomon calls the tongue of the righteous, "a tree of life to your neighbor." Let your heart be possessed with those two excellent graces, humility and charity, and then with your tongue you will not be in danger of hurting others. It may help you too to the right using, and often to the not using of your tongue, to remember that God hath said, "If any man seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, that man's religion is vain."

☞ Refrain from bitter words; there is only the difference of a letter between words and swords.

The Literal and Figurative Interpretation of Scripture.

"We have not followed cunningly devised fables;" is a most remarkable assertion of the Apostle, if so be the Bible is to be interpreted in a mystical and figurative sense; and not according to its plain, literal, and grammatical construction, as any other book. All human language is of necessity figurative; and this is especially the case in the most ancient eastern nations, the Hebrew, Greek, and Syriac languages. There is no difficulty in understanding these metaphors, symbols, figures, or allegories, and no danger of taking them literally; from the very fact that they will not bear a literal construction, without involving an absurdity, or contradiction to nature. When we speak of the "eyelids of the morning," there is no fear of any one being silly enough to think that the morning has great ogling eyes, that open at the peep of day, and close again at night. The language of Christ at the supper, "this is my body, this is my blood," could never have been understood literally, had not a crafty priesthood tried to impose a miracle on the credulous multitude, to advance their own power and authority. The literal interpretation of such language as this, is both loathsome and disgusting, and fit only for the sensual ideas of a cannibal. But while some are guilty of converting fables into facts, to suit their own purpose, are not others, for the same reason, too often disposed to turn facts into fables?

Origen was the great father of what is now termed the "Spiritual interpretation of Scripture;" there were some doctrines of the gospel that did not accommodate themselves to his taste and prejudices; how to get rid of them he did not know; till his futile brain devised the plan of turning any unsavory truth into a mystical allegory, or fable; others have followed in his wake, so that in the present day, nearly the whole of the Bible is, by some one or another, turned into a book of cunningly devised fables and eastern metaphors. Any one may see, at a glance, that this mode of interpreting Scripture is most unsafe and uncertain; leaving it to every one's imagination and fancy to twist and torture the word of God to suit their own selfish and sectarian purposes.

Is it any wonder, under this system, that the christian church is divided into so many sects and parties, and all profess to take the Bible as the rule of their faith, as they choose to understand it, and not according to its literal meaning. If men were to use any other book with the same liberty of interpretation as they do the Scriptures, they would be considered fit inmates of a lunatic asylum; and we certainly need an infallible interpreter, quite as much or more, than an infallible text, and we must go back to Rome to find one, before we can arrive at any certainty with regard to a single article of christian faith, if this system is the true one. If even our own commentators would abide by their own rules of interpretation, we should not have half the difficulty we now have; but these rules are like some men's promises, made only to be broken the first opportunity. They tell us, that "all scripture is to be taken literally; if it will bear a literal interpretation without involving an absurdity, or contradicting any plain and clear doctrine of God's word."

Now let us see how they abide by their own rules, in an instance or two. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." This text, according to its literal meaning, is as plain and clear as the sun at noonday—death is the penalty of sin, eternal life can only be obtained as a gift of God, through faith in Christ, the author and giver of life. Does this involve any absurdity? Does it contradict one single passage in the Bible? Not one. Hundreds of texts corroborate the truth, that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die;" that none but those who love and serve God shall have eternal life; nothing can possibly be made more plain and clear than this uniform testimony of Scripture, from Genesis to Revelation. But how do our learned divines explain this passage? They fly directly in the face of their own rules of interpretation, by denying the literal interpretation of the text, without attempting to prove its absurdity, or disagreement with any other passage in the word of God. They deny that death, the extinction of being, is the penalty of sin, and substitute eternal torment in its place. They deny that eternal life is the gift of God through Christ; and affirm that all men are immortal, but they give no proof of this assertion, and tell us it is to be taken for granted, merely from inference! It is just as easy to prove the opposite to this by inference; and indeed to prove any thing in the same way; but for the immortality of all men, in opposition to the express declarations of Scripture, that "all the wicked God will destroy," we certainly need something more than inference.

The personal reign of Christ on earth, is as clearly foretold as his sufferings and death; but while we are obliged to take the latter according to the letter, because it has been so fulfilled; we take the liberty of interpreting the former to be a spiritual reign, and a spiritual kingdom! Thus the truth of God's word is spirited away by the traditions of men, and made of none effect.

Is it any wonder that people reject the Bible as a revelation from God, and are left to wander without a guide on the dark mountains of infidelity, when those who profess to be the authorized teachers of religion, thus pervert, misrepresent, and mystify the only true light that God has given us, in this dark world of sin and death; and thus darken counsel by words without knowledge?"

It is this evil spirit of spiritualising every thing to suit our own preconceived opinions, that has caused men to say, till it has almost become a proverb, that "the Bible is like an old fiddle, that you can play on it any tune you please." When the adversary could no longer play his old game of making the Bible a forbidden book to the people, he has changed his policy, and now permits them to read it; but it must only be read through the many-colored spectacles of orthodox creeds, and sectarian prejudice! And if any one dares to be so singular as to use his own eyes in preference to those of other men, he is at once denounced as an heretic and an infidel!

But see the inconsistency of these commentators of Scripture; while they spiritualize and mystify many plain and literal facts, and turn them into fables, they will, at times, jump over to the opposite extreme, and make that literal; that, to all intents and purposes, cannot bear a literal interpretation without an absurdity, or at least a contradiction to truths plainly revealed.

One instance of this has been already noticed in the literal interpretation of the words of Christ, "this is my body, &c." We notice one more of the same nature, in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus; this is first acknowledged to be a parable, and then immediately denied, by substituting a literal interpretation which is a manifest absurdity to all but those who are wilfully blind. If it is a parable, it will not bear a literal interpretation; if it is an history of facts, they are surely stranger than fiction, and require no little credulity to digest them. On the same principle we may prove that trees and shrubs possess reason, language, and a system of government by a literal interpretation of the parable in the Old Testament, of the trees choosing a king over them.

When will people be willing to learn the will of God, to seek after truth, sit at the feet of Jesus, as Mary [illegible] not come with the head-[illegible] philosophy and vain deceit, [illegible] strive to proselyte the [illegible] self-conceived opinions of [illegible] mortals, who are but of [illegible] know nothing?

Discussion.

We have accepted another invitation to discuss the truth of the Bible. Question.—"Do the Scriptures teach the final salvation of all men?" The discussion is to be in the Town Hall, at Castleton, Vt., commencing Monday evening, Jan. 3d, and continuing three evenings. Our opponent is H. P. Cutting, the Universalist minister in the place.

The Soul.—No. 11.

We have now examined the first twenty-one texts in the Bible where nephesh, the word rendered soul, occurs, but have found no proof, or even hint, or a passage from which we could draw the most distant inference that man has an immortal soul. We have come down the stream of time, in the history of man, over two thousand years, and we stop to inquire, why this total silence on the subject, if popular theology is true? We have carefully examined the creation of man, and many records of death, but find no idea advanced that man is alive between death and the resurrection. We think the case is perfectly clear that man, the WHOLE MAN IS MORTAL; this being true, Satan is proved a liar, because he declared man to be immortal.

There are two passages which some bring as objections to our conclusion, which we will examine. The first is in Gen. 35 : 18–19, where we have the record of the death of Rachel, the wife of Jacob, at the birth of Benjamin. "And it came to pass, as her soul was in departing, (for she died,) that she called his name Ben-oni; but his father called him Benjamin. And Rachel died, and was buried in the way to Ephrath, which is Bethlehem." Had nephesh been rendered life in this passage, as it is in one hundred and twenty other places, and might be in many more, the text would be perfectly plain, and in harmony with all the facts stated in connection with the death of Rachel. All the reassuring of skillful logicians cannot alter the Scripture declaration,—"Rachel died and was buried;" and, "as her NEPHESH (life) was in departing," or in other words, while she was dying, she named her infant child. The Septuagint reads;—"And it came to pass in her giving up the ghost, (for she was dying) that she called his name, The son of my pain, but his father called his name Benjamin." "Giving up the ghost" is the old Bible way of saying she is dying; and "gave up the ghost" is more properly rendered "expired," and is thus rendered in the new translation by the Amer. Bible Union. We see no proof of an immortal soul in the passage just examined.

The other text, sometimes referred to as an objection to our position, is in 1. Kin. 17 : 21, 22, 23. "And he (Elijah) stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the Lord and said, O Lord my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again. And the Lord heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived. And Elijah took the child, and brought him down out of the chamber into the house, and delivered him unto his mother; and Elijah said, see, thy son liveth." Had nephesh been rendered life in this Scripture, all would be plain. If we turn back to the 17th verse of this chapter, we read in relation to the child, "And it came to pass, after those things, the son of the woman, the mistress of the house, fell sick; and his sickness was so sore, that there was no breath (n'shamah) left in him." Is this breath the child? No one would be so absurd as to claim it. The child lies dead before the prophet. What does the mother desire? That the life of the child may be restored. Elijah [illegible] for its restoration, "and the Lord [illegible] the voice of Elijah," and the life of [illegible] child is restored. No intimation that [illegible] child had been to heaven or hell, and [illegible] called out, but the child was all this [illegible] in the house of the widow. When [illegible] breath of life came again, "Elijah [illegible] the child and brought him down out [illegible] the chamber . . . . and . . . said, "see, [illegible]

[illegible] The Septuagint reads, (ver. 17) "And it [illegible] the son of the woman, [illegible] of the house fell sick; and the disorder increased till there was no breath left in him." Ver. 21, 22. "And when he had breathed on the child three times and called on the Lord, he said, O Lord, my God, I beseech thee let this child's LIFE be restored to him. And so it came to pass, and the child cried."

We think this point is so plain that further comment is unnecessary. We know of no other passages in the Old Testament that can be brought in proof of the immortality of the soul. And, candid reader, if we are called "infidels," "atheists," "blockheads," &c. &c., for not believing what is not revealed in the Bible, nor sustained by facts, philosophy, physiology, nor common sense, let us bear it patiently, and thank the Lord we are counted worthy to suffer "persecution . . . because of the word." Let us not be ashamed of the truth of the Bible.

"The Association of Governmentizers."

The above heading is the name of a professed association of the spirits of Robert Rantoul, Daniel Webster, John Quincy Adams, Martin Luther, Roger Williams, and Socrates, for the purpose of devising plans to re-organize the governments of the world and establish them on an entire new basis. What is the foundation of this new system? The answer is found on page 136 of the Educator, a work that purports to be dictated by the spirits of men. It says,—"The corner-stone of this new enterprise rests on the following eternal principles: First, Man is IMMORTAL."

Suppose man is not immortal; what follows? Why, the whole structure of spiritualists would fall at once into chaotic ruin, and the devil and his angels would be exposed in their diabolical work of deception, and men would escape from the fatal snare. We are glad that the spirits confess that the "corner stone" of Spiritualism is founded on the immortality of the soul, or in other words, the great lie of Satan to our first parents, as recorded in Gen. 3 : 4,—"Ye shall not surely die." Glory to the Lord for the truth of the Bible that is now concentrating its radiant light upon this noted lie, and making it stand out in bold relief to all lovers of truth, who are willing to turn away from the fables of these last days, and embrace the word of the Lord which "is truth."

Let us look at some of the teachings, purposes and plans of "The Association of Governmentizers." "It . . . boldly declares . . . that the highest possible human government is interior, and may at all times, in all places, and under all possible circumstances, be safely obeyed." Educator, p. 393. It will be seen that these spirits propose to have us abolish all laws and submit to their interior teachings. Every man becomes his own lawgiver, or law-maker, by the advice of his familiar spirit, and refuses to be governed by any other law. If his "interior" lawgiver says he should leave his wife and take another man's, why, he should obey at once; and, indeed, we have already many practical examples of this "new social order," as it is termed by its supporters. If this law says take the life of your neighbor, prompt obedience should follow, and we have practical demonstrations that some have yielded to obey this "interior" law which is responsible to none but the spirits (of demons.) Such will truly be a "new social order," and more to be feared than was the French Revolution, yet we should not be disappointed to see, ere long, just such a "social order." The way is being rapidly prepared for its introduction. All classes are getting weary of restraint, and are about ready to adopt the most radical measures to rid themselves of its last vestige. The plan of the demons appears to be this;—have men abolish all laws, social, political and moral, and consent to let them dictate to our race such laws, as they, in their diabolical plans, may deem best adapted to cause a successful revolt against the government of the Lord, and thereby secure our eternal ruin. The plans of an Alexander, Cæsar, or Bonaparte, were puerile, when compared with those now being concocted by demons, to get the control of the governments of this world. The deep laid scheme in Eden is about to be consummated. The work is now a short, but most earnest one. The "battle of principles," or the contest between truth and fables "has actually begun," and let every lover of Jesus stand firm, "immovable." The spirits say, "The hour is at hand when a revolution must come . . . It will be a fearful crisis—an hour when the passions of men will be excited to an extent seldom, if ever, known before. This Association . . . . proposes to place in the hands of its general agent a series of instructions which will be of the greatest use in that hour of peril." Educator, p. 403. "Prominent persons will be placed at the helm of the new ship of state, whose motto shall be, 'ETERNAL PRINCIPLES, NOT PARTIES.'" Some of these principles have been named.

1. "Man is immortal,"—the lie of Satan.

2. "It requires two persons, male and female, to constitute a whole man."

3. "Each man, and each woman, if you please, has a perfect right, under all circumstances, in all conditions, and in whatever locations, to do as he or she pleases."

4. "Government is but a temporary arrangement, to be outgrown with the greatest possible speed." Educator, p. 412.

5. "The highest possible human government is interior, and may at all times, in all places, and under all possible circumstances, be safely obeyed."

5. "God . . . is man, and man is God . . . no clearer idea of the divine existence can possibly be communicated to mind, than in the statement that he is One Grand Universal Man." Educator, p. 526.

The foregoing are some of "the eternal prnciples to be adopted by the new government," under the direction of spirits. We believe that all these will be eternally the principles of error, that they originated with Satan, will perish with him in his final destruction, and be advocated no more forever.

The Heavenly State.

"But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city." HEB. 11: 16.

This chapter treats of patriarchs and prophets, who distinguished themselves by faith and confidence in God. Not only is their faith spoken of, but the circumstances which serve to develop it are brought to view. They were upright in their walk, constant in their love, persevering in their efforts, and patient under sufferings. No class of men ever stood higher, or were more devoted and ardent in their love. They were distinguished from the world of mankind as being the "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty." Devoted, as they were to the cause of truth, and faithful in the discharge of their obligations, they are presented as patterns of piety, and hence, worthy of imitation. "But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly."

Heaven is sometimes described as a city. The patriarchs "looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." "Jerusalem which is above is free."

As an inheritance.

Begotten "to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you." Sealed with the "Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession." Christ suffered and died that "they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance."

As a kingdom.

"I will not drink henceforth of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." "Then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of their Father." "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

They desire a better country.

Heaven is to be distinguished for its purity. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Heaven is to be peopled with a pure race.

"Those heavenly gates forever bar pollution, sin and shame."

Moral evil is to be banished from the universe of God. Christ is to achieve a complete victory over Satan, his great rival; and by destroying the author and cause of sin, to make a clean universe. There will not be one person guilty of an infraction of God's laws. Every member of that heavenly family shall breathe holiness to the Lord. Love will be the reigning passion of the heart, and hence the acts will be humane. It is to be a restoration to the primitive state of purity and uprightness. Physical purity is to be as universal as the moral. The body is to be changed, to be fashioned like Christ's glorious body.

Heaven is to be a healthy place.

Its inhabitants are to be healthy. Here the "whole creation groaneth and traveleth in pain until now;" but there, in that heavenly land, "there shall be no more pain." Sickness is that state of the body in which the organs refuse to perform their functions. In that world, nothing will disturb the order of nature, and hence, none shall die. There will be no more death. "Death shall be swallowed up in victory." "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction."

Heaven shall be peaceful.

"They shall not hurt nor destroy in all" that holy mountain. The hand of man shall be lifted up to bless his fellow man. There shall be nothing like war or conflict in the heavenly regions.

"No war nor battle's sound
Was heard the earth around,
No hostile chiefs to furious combat ran."

The passions of the human heart shall not again be aroused to contest his rights; the sword shall be sheathed, yea, it shall become a ploughshare, and the spear shall be converted into a pruning-hook. "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Peace shall reign from shore to shore; the warrior's gate shall not again be opened, pouring forth its bloody legions; for at the close of this state of things—at the end of this age—the earth shall "disclose her blood, and no more cover her slain."

Perfection shall reign in that kingdom.

Wherever we turn the eye, in this world, we see imperfection—every thing is defective, is impaired. This is true of animate as well as inanimate creation. We have inherited mortality and corruption. Our bodies are weak and sickly, the functions of which are liable to be disordered at any time; in which case, sickness invariably follows, and unless arrested, death must ensue. But there, nothing of the kind can occur; the infraction of nature's laws will never be known. Not only will there be requisitions growing out of the peculiar construction of our constitutions, but a corresponding conformity to those requisitions will at all times be realized. The heart, being sinless, there will be no inclination to mar the perfection of that glorious state. Hence, we may reasonably expect that there will never be another revolt. The Almighty has purposed, it would seem, that the whole universe shall be subject to the sceptre of his Son. And in order to guard against any inducements to sin, arising from the agency of intelligent beings who have already revolted, and are now living in a state of opposition, he has declared that he will destroy both the wicked and Satan, their great deceiver, and thus rid the universe of moral evil, and once more stamp perfection on the works of God.

Now they desire a better country.

Old Canaan, which was a type of the heavenly, could never satisfy this longing desire. Had they been mindful of the earthly Canaan, "they might have had an opportunity to have returned." But no, though they had the promise of an inheritance, they died without its accomplishment,—they did not receive it. They desired an heavenly country, the very one to which Abraham was heir—the world, brought back to its Eden state, renovated and made perfect.

Desire, in the text, expresses the idea of reaching forward or after, with the expectation of realizing, or, being gratified. None can be said to desire, in this sense, unless there is a prospect, a hope of possessing. And no such hope can exist, unless the heart be converted, renewed, changed. God has promised, to be sure, but those promised blessings can never be appropriated to us unless received through a practical faith. Conformity to his will, gives assurance to the heart; an exemplary, devoted life, gives new life to hope, and new spring to all our joys.

What glory is held out to our view in this brief sketch of those ancient saints. What examples for imitation! What patterns of piety! may heaven grant wisdom that we may imitate their example.

☞ It is not the number of days that make a life long, but the full employment of them upon the main end and purpose of life, which is the perfecting of the mind, in making a man the absolute master of himself. I reckon the matter of age among eternal things, the main point is, to live and die with honor. Every man that lives is upon the way, and must go through with his journey without stopping, until he comes at the end; and wheresoever it ends, if it ends well it is a perfect life.—Seneca.

☞ It is much easier to suppress the first desire, than to satisfy [illegible] low it.

For the Crisis.

The Two-Horned Beast.—No. 7

The connection that this beast sustains with the papal beast, is the same that exists between the papal beast and "false prophet." Its location or place of action is the same. The first "doeth great wonders;" the second "wrought miracles." The first operates "in the sight of the beast;" the second, in his presence, or "before him." Their work before the beast being at one and the same time—the time of the harlot's going to judgment—proves that the two-horned beast and false prophet are one and the same power; and also that this power is the last enemy with which the church will have to contend.

Again, as the eighth, or revived 7th head of the beast, is the one that "goeth into perdition," (Rev. 17 : 11) and with the ten kings wars against the Lamb, it follows that the "Antichrist" is no other than the 8th or revived head of the Leopard beast; or rather, that it will head up in that 8th head. Whether viewing these heads as belonging to Imperial or Papal Rome, many writers have come to the same conclusions respecting the power that represents the 7th head. Thus Mr. Smith remarks on page 59 of his "Dissertation on Prophecy;"

"Whenever the Roman beast revives in his seventh head, which continues a short space, it must be in his heathen or infidel nature of avowed as well as real opposition to the cause of Christ. . . . And if I am not deceived, this head has recently appeared under an Atheistic-republican form of government." He wrote in 1811.

Mr. Bickersteth, in his "Practical Guide to the Prophecies," introduced Mr. Frere as excelling "in sympathy of arrangement" of the Apocalyptic visions. And says an English pamphlet of August, 1858, "Mr. Frere has long ago advanced the opinion that Napoleon the First was the seventh head of the beast, and so powerful was his conviction of this fact, that even when Napoleon and his son had both died, Mr. Frere still continued to persist in his opinion, and to look forward to the revival of the Napoleonic dynasty."

I need not here stop to prove that the French dynasty under Napoleon First was the seventh head of the Roman beast. Facts are abundant on this point, and are before your readers. Lorenzo Dow preached the same many years ago in my hearing; and his conclusions were that the Bonaparte then living near Philadelphia was the Napoleon First bought off from exile, and would revive the French dynasty and would be the power that would go into perdition; or it would revive in his son.

Mr. Smith, page 128, in meeting the objections that France could not be that Antichristian power because she adopted the Catholic religion, says, "The re-establishment of popery in France is so far from furnishing an argument against the nation bearing the character of Antichrist, as it has been stated, that it furnishes the decisive argument in favor of it. The beast from the bottomless pit (Rev. 17) is bearing the papal harlot to her execution."

Again, in referring to the connection between the beast and false prophet, as brought to view in several places in the Revelations, says, "In all these passages Antichrist and Popery are found in this very connection. Accordingly, Paul, in sketching the character of Antichrist, (2 Thess. 3 : 1–5) closes the description in these words, 'having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.' Thus the present nominal religion of the empire is so far from furnishing an objection to that empire's being the very Antichrist of the last time, that this very circumstance is essential to its sustaining this character; and presents an unanswerable argument of its being the very Antichrist." [Here Mr. Smith seems to lose sight of its death and revival, or its wound and cure.] "And no other power beside the French Empire can now possibly be expected to arise on the ground of the old Roman Empire, which can answer to the predictions of the last terrible beast, and which can be found in this connection with the false prophet, and can with him go into perdition in the battle of the great day." "This argument, then, in my opinion, approaches near to demonstration that the French Empire is that last and terrible head of the Roman beast, and is the very Antichrist of the last time."

Now if the French Empire under Napolean First was the seventh head, (and this power certainly received a [illegible] the sword unlike [illegible] of W[illegible] the world wondering while beholding "the beast that was, and is not, and yet is?" are questions now of thrilling interest.

It may not be amiss here to note the character of this seventh head power, that we may more accurately discover its revival. The seventh head of the old Roman beast, continuing a short space, has been verified in the terrible republic." "Revolutionary France, by national authority, not only denied the christian religion, but the being of God." "Man when free wants no other divinity than himself. Reason dethrones both the kings of the earth and the King of heaven," was the language of their national convention. Says Mr. Smith, "This infidel power abolished the covenant of marriage. . . . They decreed that the promiscuous intercourse of the sexes was no crime." p. 105. On page 119 he further remarks, "It was this scheme of Illuminism in France which took the lead of their revolution. This was the origin of those events which have deluged Europe with blood, and filled the great part of the civilized world with terror. The plan which came into operation in the French revolution, was previously matured; and legions of Illuminees were at their respective posts to manage the fatal operations.

The subterranean fire, which had long been kindling in dark recesses, now burst like a volcano from its dire caverns, terrifying the nations with its portentous discharge. And in the terrible Atheistical nation appeared the rise instead of the fall of Antichrist." "These means (says an American traveler in France,) which were employed by the Jacobins to subvert all governments, are now, under the military despotism of Bonaparte, leveled upon a more enlarged plan, and with more active industry, against the liberties and morals of every people."

After the wounding of this seventh head at the battle of Waterloo, Illuminees fled to this country; and, says Mr. Smith, "It could not be expected that so fair a portion of the christian world as the United States would escape the insidious attempts of modern infidels." "We cannot suppose them to have forgotten to 'hide the hand that gives the blow;' nor have abandoned their object, which was to 'bind the world with invisible hands.'"

Here are some of the characteristics of the "seventh head," and how fearfully wide spread are the same elements, marching on to the same terrible result. Their motto then was, "crush the wretch," (meaning Christ); and to such a fearful extent did this infidel principle arise, that Voltaire boasted that from Geneva to Berne not a christian was to be found; and that if things went on at this rate, "in twenty years God would be in a pretty plight."

But the winds were to be held in check until the servants of God were sealed. And by the allied powers of Europe, through the interposition of God, Satan has not been able to bring about the "great battle;" neither will he until the servants of God are sealed. How merciful in God to put a check to this seventh head power until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in! Being baffled in his attempt to consolidate the kingdoms under Bonaparte I., and thereby cause the word of the Lord to fail, Satan has been arranging his force and enlisting his soldiers under his immediate "spiritual" guidance and power. It is not merely in Europe, but throughout the entire world that he is now marshaling his mighty host.

We have shown that the seventh head power was atheistical, infidel, licentious The eighth head, or the same seventh head revived, will have the same character. And how true it is that "Spiritualism, world-renowned, is carrying out the same principles that brought about the French revolution, and developed the seventh head of the terrible beast.

The eighth head bears a different relation to the papal beast from either of the seven. Therefore it is represented by a "two-horned beast" working wonders "in sight of" or "before him." By this power the great "conflict" will be arranged, and that too under the guidance of "spirits of devils working miracles,"—Spiritualism.

And if christians were endangered under the seven heads before it, will they not suffer under the summing up of those heads in the eighth? Says Mr. Smith, "Let none, then, deceive you, by treating lightly the warnings relative to this subject; or insinuating that they are chimerical. People who are [illegible]

[illegible] wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand.' . . . When any, therefore, despise the warnings upon this subject, consider well their character, to what class they belong, and what connections or influence may induce them to wish to keep concealed the iniquity of the system, which is so manifest in the world. 'And take heed that no man deceive you.'"

The Problem Solved!!

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I have been anxiously waiting to see the important discussion had by you and Dr. Litch, and now it has come, I have given it a critical examination, with a disposition to learn the truth on this question, if indeed I had it not. An important and difficult problem has been fully solved by the learned Dr. Litch. What was the problem? Why, how it could be that man was in the grave where "there is no knowledge, nor wisdom, nor device;" and man was in hades, a place which Bro. Bliss says means the depths below, in contrast to heaven above, that in that department of it called Paradise, good men were, and yet they were in the New Jerusalem above—in heaven. But now all is made plain.

According to Dr. Litch, there are three men combined in one. The outer man is buried in the grave, where "there is no knowledge," consequently he knows nothing. The "inner man," i. e., the spirit, goes to God, and if good, is assigned to the New Jerusalem. The soul-man goes into hades. Now on this principle you perceive I can harmonize the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. The rich man died; the body-man went into the grave where there is no knowledge. In hades the soul-man lifted up his eyes, saw the soul-man Lazarus, and asked him to dip the tip of his finger in water and cool his tongue, for he was tormented in flame. During this time, the spirit-man of each had gone to God, and the spirit-man Lazarus was, with other spirit-men, made perfect in the New Jerusalem!! Where the spirit-man Dives was sent by God, we know not. Do you not see, Bro. Grant, how completely Dr. Litch's view reconciles what before seemed so conflicting in this matter? Paul can be "with Christ" above and in hades below at the same time.

But notwithstanding this great problem is fully solved, one other point remains obscure. Dr. Litch argues the separate and conscious existence of the soul, and of the spirit; to the one he imputes "life;" he denominates it the "living principle;" to the other he imputes consciousness, denominating it the "conscious principle, that which apprehends, that gives us intelligence, sensibility, knowledge." Now it would seem as though the "living principle," or the soul, ought to be connected with the spirit, in order to give that "conscious principle;" but the Dr. does not so consider it needful, for he makes them to exist consciously, independent of each other. See p. 21, where he says the rich man was in hades,—"not his spirit, for that went to God to be disposed of"—not his body, for that he says "was buried." On p. 6 he says, "that the spirit is the inward man, the inside man—the man that dwells within the tabernacle, within this casket of clay." This "inward man, the inside man, the man that dwells within the tabernacle," "went to God to be disposed of," while the "rich man," the soul-man, (whether "inner or outer," or a part of both, the Dr. saith not) was already "disposed of" in hades, where he was tormented. The spirit-man that went to God, had the form and organs of the outer man, for when the one is decomposed, the other stands "undecomposed, with all his members entire, perfect." p. 31. The soul-man too possesses these, or he could not see Lazarus and ask him to dip the tip of his finger in water to cool his tongue! So we have three men, with "members entire, perfect!!"

I do really feel, Bro. Grant, that I have obtained new light on this point. I have for several years stood on the Dr.'s side in regard to this question of consciousness, but I had no expectation of receiving such a new and astonishing manifestation of light from him, nor such a complete solving of the problem!!

From Sr. A. B. Pilcher.

BRO. GRANT:—The Crisis is a welcome visitor. It is like bread to the hungry, and water to the thirsty. There are but few in this place who believe in the speedy coming of the Lord. It is seldom we have any preaching. We have our discouragements as well as others. We are sometimes reminded of St. Paul's language, when he said, "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed." We continue to meet in our prayer meetings, and try to comfort and encourage each other on our pilgrimage.

Sorrow and affliction have frequently marked my path. The enemy has broken the family circle, and laid those near and dear to us in the grave. Yet we "sorrow not, even as others which have no hope;" for "we believe that Jesus died and rose again; even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." We rejoice that the time is near when our children, with all the sleeping saints, will hear the mighty trump sound, when they shall leave their dusty beds; when they shall return to the land where the inhabitants will no more say, I am sick.

Dear reader, what is your prospect? Is your hope bright? Have you set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth? If so, then toil on; the crown will be yours.

Praise the Lord, O my soul, praise him for his loving kindness. In my distress I called unto the Lord and he heard me. May the Lord grant us all a rich reward in his everlasting kingdom.

Your sister, A. B. PILCHER.
Elizabeth, Ill.

From Bro. D. T. Taylor.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—Still here among our relatives and friends, I drop a line. I perceive that either myself or your printer has made a mistake in causing me to say in my letter to you I had not preached but two Sundays in four weeks. The truth is, I have not occupied the pulpit but two Sundays for the last four months, and even those efforts so injured me that I have been constrained to relinquish preaching altogether for the present.

I do not despair of recovery, for though human chances may seem to be against me, yet my case is in the hands of a physician of extraordinary skill, one in whom I have great confidence, who affirmed that "with the help of God," he could cure me in six months. But while I thus feel confidence in the skill and remedies of my doctor, I have more confidence in the power of the prayer of faith, and yet more in the ability of God the great Life-giver. I hope the prayers of the church will be answered in my behalf, should any be offered for one so unworthy.

I write this in part to reply to the numerous and repeated invitations I am constantly receiving to go hither and thither to preach, which I regret to say have all to be answered with a "No." But I can still use the pen to some extent without injury, and mean to do so. And while there is life I shall hope on.

I rejoice in your success at Poultney, and elsewhere, and hope all our preachers will labor directly for the conversion of sinners. I have not forgotten the season that followed one year ago to-night, at Cheshire, Ct., and trust those who shared in the mercy that, on that joyous occasion, streamed down from the throne, have neither forgotten it or me. Nor do we cease to remember our friends in W——, where we have labored, and toiled hard the past four years. May God bless all his dear saints. Peace and joy be with them. Amen. So farewell. Yours in tribulation,

DANL. T. TAYLOR.

☞ Rev. Mr. E——, who lives near Portland, was preparing his discourse for the next Sabbath, stopping occasionally to review what he had written, and to erase that which he was disposed to disapprove; he was accosted by his little son, who had numbered but three summers:

"Father, does God tell you what to preach?"

"Certainly, my child."

"Then what makes you scratch it out?"

☞ If you would be happy, make others so, and their happiness will warm and fill your heart. Love makes God and the blessed angels happy; and when the children of men fill their hearts with love, heavenly love, they are happy also.

The first duty of a sinner is repentance.

Notice.

At last I am in New York. Will attend to numerous letters soon. Shall be here sometime. Letters till Jan. 25th may be sent to me here. I have English Bibles. Shall have plenty of books and tracts soon. Send in orders. Books and tracts cheaper than ever for cash. God bless you all. The poor may order freely without cash. Any church or individual that will send me $50 in advance, shall have from 80 to 100,000 pages of tracts to scatter—such kinds as they choose. I shall have out several new "Scripture Searchers," "Olive Leaves" and Tracts, if the Lord will. Also Great Controversy, Pauline Theology, Voice of the Church, Spiritualism, and other publications generally, including "My Pilgrim Harp," price 6 cts., all if the Lord will.

Pour in your orders to H. L. HASTINGS, care of J. J. Reed, 43 Centre Street, New York.

Debt and Grace.

The N. Y. Morning Express, speaking of the "Books of the Past Year," says: "Separate doctrines have called forth discussions involving great ability and research. As a specimen of these, we may mention 'Debt and Grace, as related to the Doctrine of a Future Life,' published in Boston by Jewett & Co. The author labors to prove that the idea of eternal punishment [suffering] tends to dualism; and his argument against it—founded on Scripture and the creed of the early Christians—is profound and powerful."

We find that Oettinger, in his work on the Sin against the Holy Ghost as connected with Christian Eschatology, admits that the received view of eternal damnation implies dualism, but not a dualism unworthy of God.

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Unity, N. H., Dec. 1st, at the residence of her son-in-law, Bro. L. May, after a painful sickness of about four weeks, with typhoid fever, Sister MARY WHITING, widow of the late Almond Whiting, of West Windsor, Vt., in the 54th year of her age.

Sr. Whiting had been a professor of the Christian religion twenty-seven years, and I learn, ever adorned her profession with a devout life. She heard and embraced the glorious doctrine of the second advent at hand, in the year 1843; since that time I have been acquainted with her, and she has manifested a devotedness to the precious cause of her soon coming Lord that is manifested but by a few. Her home was a home for God's humble servants. It seemed to be a pleasure to her to administer to their wants. The widow and the fatherless shared her kindness. Her devotedness to the afflicted manifested that she remembered the saying of Jesus, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." She was a christian, not in word only, but in deed and truth. And when disease fastened its withering grasp upon her, it found her submissive to the divine will. Although her sufferings were severe, yet she manifested no desire to recover, but confidently anticipated the rest promised to the people of God. It may truly be said of her, in the language of the Spirit, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; they rest from their labors, and their works follow them."

She has left an only daughter, who, with her husband and other relatives and friends, deeply feel their loss; but they have the full assurance that their loss is her infinite gain.

Domestic News.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 36.—There is reason to believe that the liberal party of Mexico, who who are seeking a recognition of the Juarez government by our own, would consent to enter into a treaty by which the United States could establish military posts in Chihuahua and Sonora, thus avoiding objections to forcible possession, as recently officially recommended.

An answer is expected by the latter part of January, to certain propositions, looking to a settlement of the Central American question, which were transmitted to England several weeks ago.

NOTICES.

Notice.

The third quarterly meeting of the Galena Dis. will be held at Elizabeth, Jo Davis Co., Ill., to commence Jan. 13th, 1859, at 7 o'clock.

Notice.

A quarterly meeting conference will be holden in Viroqua, Bad Axe Co. Wis., commencing Friday, Jan. 7th, at half-past six o'clock in the evening, and continuing over the Lord's day following. Our beloved brother Levi Lyons is expected to be in attendance with the writer, to preach the word. We hope that other preaching brethren will attend that can do so. This is the first conference of the kind that has ever been holden in this place. We hope, therefore, that the dear saints will come together to this feast of tabernacles strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, filled with the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of peace, and thus be prepared to do good and get good, that God may be glorified in and by his people. Amen.

North Western Pennsylvania Conference.

A conference is appointed to meet at Blooming Valley, Crawford Co., Pa., to commence Thursday evening, Jan. 13th, 1859, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope to see a general rally of brethren and sisters from the surrounding country, and that the resolutions of the last conference will not be forgotten.

BIBLE vs. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested; the Corruptions of Theologians Detected, and the Traditions of men Exposed: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. An invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. Price, bound, 75 cents; a cheap edition, in paper covers, 35 cents.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by the Editor of the Bible Examiner; prefaced with a Biographical Sketch of the Author. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons, and fully revised. Price in plain binding 50 cens; in gilt 75 cents. A cheap edition, in paper covers, 30.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT, by Rev. H. H. Dobney, Baptist Minister, England. "Part second." 200 pages. This work is very valuable; showing that literal death is the punishment of the wicked. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents.

THE DISCUSSION between Prof. MATTISON, of the Methodist E. Church, and the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner. Question:—"Does the Bible teach that the creature Man—which the Lord God formed of the dust of the ground—has a superadded entity called the soul?" Price 25 cents in paper covers; 38 cents bound.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by the Editor of the Bible Examiner. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; bound 38 cents.

"THE WATCH TOWER: or, MAN IN DEATH; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, mis-named "spiritualism," but which is really animalism. Price 20 cents.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—By Prof. WILSON, England. His general theory is, that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents in paper covers; 75 cents bound.

"MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, The Animal Man and the Spiritual Man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS." TEXT.—"That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."—John 3: 6. [illegible]

[illegible] but a moment, and count the many [illegible]
[illegible] of sorrow running o'er,
[illegible] the way from Eden has coursed the many [illegible]
[illegible] Time sighs to be no more.

CHORUS.

[illegible] joy and song of the weary,
Old Time, old Time soon will be no more;
Then pain and death will linger round us never more,
When old Time with cares is o'er.

Should we seek mirth and pleasure with music light and gay,
There are sorrows waiting at the door;
Though our voices are silent, there's something seems to say,
That old Time soon will be no more.

In scenes that's sad and dreary though we may share a part,
There's a hope that will cheer us evermore;
There's a prayer that will echo in every faithful heart,
That old Time soon may be no more.

There are loved forms now sleeping within the silent tomb,
That we shall not behold any more,
Till we greet them immortal in Eden's happy home,
When old Time with its cares is o'er.

Not a sigh shall be wafted across the troubled wave,
Not a wail shall be heard upon that shore;
Not a dirge shall be murmured around the lowly grave,
When old Time with its cares is o'er.

Incidents

IN THREE MONTHS' EXPERIENCE.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—Since I last wrote to you, I have been called to pass through deep affliction. My eldest daughter, Roxana, was taken with a severe attack of typhoid fever on the 16th day of Sept., and brought to the very gates of the grave. While she was still very low, about the 9th of Oct., my wife and youngest son, John, came down with the same disease. On the night of the 12th of Oct., two neighboring women were watching till midnight, when I arose to relieve them, but they insisted that I should retire again, as I was much fatigued, and worn with the loss of sleep. I lay down for two hours more, during which time I had the following dream.

I seemed to be standing by the roadside on the way to the burying-ground, when a large funeral procession came along in a very orderly manner. The advanced part was in fair and open view, but over the remote portion, darkness seemed to rest, so that I could not see the extent of the train. Just advanced from the darkness appeared a single coffin, of medium dimensions. While contemplating the advancing multitude, my attention was suddenly drawn in the opposite direction, to a man of majestic mien, coming with uncovered head, bearing an instrument of burnished metal, oblong and hollow, upon which he beat a marching air with his left hand, while at the same time, with his right, he beat a tolling stroke like the sounding of the funeral bell. When he came within a few rods of the procession, he ceased the tune, but continued the solemn tolling stroke with the utmost regularity; when quite near he ceased this also, and raising his voice in the most terrible manner, he exclaimed, "Woe, woe, woe to the people of the land because of iniquity!" He then seated himself by the side of the way, and I cast my eyes on the people;—their heads were bowed in sorrow and consternation, and one was giving a solemn exhortation to the rest, when all passed and I awoke impressed as I never was before by a mere dream. I told my sister that I thought death would enter my family, and that trouble was impending over a sinful land.

But to resume the sketches of reality.—On the next day my second son, Virgil, was taken, and went into the doctor's care; and on Thursday night, while watching [illegible] the last part of the night, my little [illegible], when I was attending to him in [illegible] "It is so cold." I rallied some as[illegible] as soon as I could,—but, alas! [illegible] proceeded from the ice-band [illegible] soon the little sufferer [illegible] last. Toward the close of [illegible] day, I followed Johnny to his [illegible] place, with only a single other [illegible] of the family to accompany me [illegible]. The next day, or Saturday, [illegible] and my daughter [illegible] the dreadful mal[illegible] [illegible] family was prostrate at once (myself excepted) with this disease in its most malignant form. My physician told me and others, that he thought, at times, I must lose my entire family. I passed days and nights of weariness and anxiety till Nov. 11th, when Byron too died, and the next day, just four weeks from the time my little son was buried, I went, a poor lone mourner, from my own family, to see my "stay and staff" laid by his brother's side.

In losing my eldest son, I lost a priceless treasure. He always labored with uncomplaining fidelity for his parents' welfare; and never said, however much I might be gone to preach, "You are gone too much." He bore his last sufferings with patience rarely witnessed. He desired to live that he might obey the Lord in baptism, stating to Sister Willard that he should attend to it the first thing when recovered, if spared to live. But my dear boy sleeps the sleep of death, and the "Judge of all the earth" will do right.

For eight weeks I never undressed to retire to rest, but slept some part of each night on a temporary pallet, as I could find opportunity; but watched more or less with my sick family every night. Some dear ones in Christ were friends indeed; I would especially name Bro. and Sr. Willard, and their eldest son, as those to whom I owe a debt of gratitude I can never repay. The Lord reward them with eternal life in the world to come.

There have been some other deaths from the same fever; and several of my connection are now quite low. I have related the above dream as one among the incidents of the past season of trial. He "that hath a dream, let him tell a dream." (Jer. 23: 18.) It is written, however, that God speaketh "In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon man, in slumberings upon the bed, then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction." (Job 33: 15, 16.) As to impending woe, the sure word certifies us that we are living in the time when "the third woe cometh quickly." We should "watch and pray always that we may be accounted worthy to escape all those things that are coming upon the earth, and to stand before the Son of man."

For the present, I am debarred the privilege of traveling and preaching as heretofore, but, as my family are improving in health, I hope again to resume active labor in the gospel field, though I have just now to endeavor to repay my kind relatives something in turn, for their goodness to me in my affliction, by watching with their sick families at night, and rendering such other assistance as I am able. But O for a home in that delectable land where "the inhabitants shall no more say, I am sick!" May the Lord "preserve us to his heavenly kingdom."

From your unworthy "brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ." Farewell.

Letters Illustrative of Christian Experience.—No. 6.

MY DEAR SISTER:—You very readily acknowledge the claims that God has upon your entire being, and admit the correctness of those principles laid down in my last letter; but feel an unwillingness to assume the responsibilities connected with an open profession and confession of Christ, and a life of entire devotedness to his service. With your present lack of love for Christ, it seems impossible to you that you could ever delight to do his will, and esteem it a privilege to confess him before the world. You think of the many duties that would be incumbent upon you, the crosses to be borne, the self-denial to be practiced, the reproach to be endured, and you exclaim, "I am not sufficient for these things!" But, my dear M——, you are not to go a warfare at your own charges; your sufficiency is of God, and his strength is made perfect in weakness. Without Christ, you can do nothing, but through him you can do all things that he requires. You are brought into the "valley of decision," and while the Spirit of God is convicting you of your duty, and urging upon you the requirements of the gospel, the world, the flesh and the devil, are uniting their forces to prevent your yielding obedience to Christ. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." "Whosoever he be among you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."

Permit me here to relate as a warning to you the truthful experience of a young lady who once occupied the very same position that you now occupy. When she entered upon the christian life, she felt it her duty to labor for the salvation of souls; but the enemy of her soul told her that she was too young, and that it would be thought fanatical. She looked at those who had for ten, twenty, and some for forty years, professed to love the Savior, and yet had never gone forward in the work of the Lord, and never invited her to seek salvation. The enemy prevailed. She "decided to be a consistent christian:" meaning by that, that she would attend upon all the ordinary means of grace, be very quiet, persevere while she lived, and look for "a triumphant death." Sometimes she would be convicted respecting her conformity to the world in dress and conversation, and in regard to spending the Lord's money in useless adornments. These, however, by being slighted, wore off, and she relapsed into a state of formality, which lasted about five years. Speaking of her condition during that time, she says: "I was not a hypocrite; neither was I an accepted child of God. I never was absent from the prayer or class meeting during this time, when it was possible for me to get there. I never neglected secret prayer. But this one thing I did: whenever the duty of being peculiar for Christ's sake presented itself to my mind, the thought was dismissed as soon as possible."

At the end of five years of such experience, she was taken suddenly and violently ill with a fever. And now she began to reflect upon her future destiny. She was unprepared for death, yet she flattered herself with the thought that when the trying hour came, God would give her victory, and all would be well; and on the strength of this delusive hope, she looked forward to death without fear. Alas! how many thousands there are who live cold and formal during life, expecting deliverance and triumph at death, and the obituary notices which occupy so large a place in the columns of the religious paper, do much to strengthen this hope. If people live right, they will die right.

But to return to our narration. I will give it in her own words. "I do not know how long I had been ill, but one day I thought myself dying. Soon I thought my spirit was separated from the body, and conducted into a place so dark that the 'blackness of darkness' would be language but faintly adequate to its description. I supposed this a place I must pass through in my passage to the 'world of light.' For some time I groped my way patiently through the darkness, constantly expecting to see the 'emerald gates' of the 'Holy City' opened before me, and that I might at any moment be ushered into the presence of the 'Majesty of Heaven.' Soon, as I expected, the gates were opened before me; and with joy indescribable I hurried forward to be 'forever with the Lord.' From another direction two little children, surrounded each with a halo of light, suddenly passed me—entered the gates, and that instant they closed. What, thought I, can this mean? Am I shut out forever? 'Yes, said conscience, forever! Your probation is closed! Time was when you might have been saved, but now this "blackness of darkness,"—this banishment from God, is but the beginning of what eternity has in reserve for you.' 'But I have been a christian for years, my external life has been almost blameless, and how can it be that I am to fail of getting into the 'Holy City?' 'Ah!' said conscience, 'you saw in life that not every one that saith Lord, Lord, would enter the kingdom; you saw plainly that your work was not all done; and yet you ventured to leave a part until it was too late. If God had saved you, he could not have been just.' Sure enough! it was all plain now; and in despair indescribable, my wail of disappointment began. Banished from God! Yes, eternally! eternally! I might have been saved, but I would not! O, if I could only commence life anew, how small every thing else would seem compared with a preparation to escape this dreadful place. How, were it possible, would I urge upon christians the necessity of coming out from the world and being separate from it. But it is too late, too late! * * * How long I remained thus I cannot tell. Suddenly I became conscious that I was yet in the body. My mother sat beside me. * * * * * Prayer for me was proposed. I did not desire to hear it. I did not wish them so to insult God, as to offer me in my last moments, when I had slighted his commands to so late a period."

I have not room on my sheet for the remainder of her experience, but will give further extracts [illegible] next. In the mean time, may you decide, "As for me I will serve the Lord."

Yours affectionately, M. D. W.

The Preacher.

"So they read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading."—NEH. 8: 8.

Much has been said and written upon the subject of preaching, and much has been done and called preaching which never deserved the name. Some think that if they select one verse from the Bible, and write something after it, to read in public, this is preaching the gospel; but this is reading, and often poor reading, as to manner and matter; for it is frequently the case that the text is from the Bible, and the sermon from Seneca, Calvin, Hopkins, or some other unscriptural master. Some who are opposed to this unprofitable method, run to another extreme, and take the whole Bible for their text, and their sermons are like Solomon's Proverbs, so unconnected, that almost the whole time is taken up in hearing that which they cannot possibly retain in their memories. Much of this kind of preaching is labor lost, and time unprofitably spent. There is another method of preaching equally unprofitable; this is found among the Friends (or Quakers); they conclude it best to carry neither Scripture or notes to meeting with them, but go and wait for the Spirit to move them to speak. Some of them, it appears, wait months, if not years, for that to come which perhaps never comes. These preachers (if they deserve the name,) often disappoint people who take pains to hear them, as they often return home without hearing one word said. This is one of the most unaccountable mistakes (to say the best of it) that I ever knew men in, under the name of religion. It makes a public man useless, and causes the people to remain in ignorance. By taking a view of the state of the people who remain under these different kinds of preaching, a man must be convinced that there is a more excellent way of giving public instruction than any of the above, which too many now attend unto, under the name of the ministers of Christ.

A method of preaching different from all these, is plainly pointed out in my text; a method which will not fail to benefit, if attended to by preachers.

This is contained in three particulars:

1. They read in the book in the law of God distinctly.
2. They gave the sense.
3. They caused the people to understand the reading.

The manner of reading the law in the days of Nehemiah was solemn indeed. Ezra, the priest, stood upon a pulpit of wood erected for that purpose, with six men on each side of him. Before him was gathered the men and women, and all that could understand what was read. When he opened the book, all the people stood up, and said, "Amen, amen, with lifting up their hands, and they bowed their heads, and worshipped the Lord with their faces to the ground." It appears from this, that Ezra read every sentence of the law of Moses to the people. After this time the leading men among the Jews divided the five books of Moses into fifty-two parts, and read one part every Sabbath day, so that in one year the people heard the whole law read. This is particularly noticed by the New Testament writers. They also read some part of the writings of the prophets constantly to the people. In this way they had an opportunity to know what the prophets had written. This practice of reading the Scriptures is now too much neglected. Some read a chapter, but do not give the sense. At this day, the Scriptures are but little read in public, to what they might be. It has become a fashion among almost all preachers to select one verse, and divide and subdivide that, and speak upon it once or twice in one day; which is not the most profitable way in general. If preachers were to read several verses, or a whole chapter, this reading would be instructive and edifying, for many find comfort in reading the Scriptures, without hearing any thing said upon what is written.

2. They gave the sense of what was read.

It appears that when Ezra read a sentence, he paused, and told the people what that sentence meant, so that the people not only knew what the law said, but what it required of them. This is the right way of preaching. If preachers of the gospel were to come into this way of preaching, the people would get more instruction in one day than they do in months in the present fashionable mode of preaching. Let a man who understands the Scriptures, read forty verses, and give the sense of each verse, the people would receive as much instruction as they would from forty sermons, because a preacher, if he speaks ever so long, can do no more than give the sense of the text he speaks upon.

3. They caused the people to understand the reading.

At this day, there are many men who pass for preachers, who are constantly telling their hearers that the Scriptures are dark, that the Bible contains inexplicable mysteries, and that there are many things in the Scriptures to be believed which are not expressed, and which cannot be understood. We cannot reasonably suppose that such men will cause the people to understand what is "noted in the Scriptures of truth." The Spirit of God brings to light things which have been kept secret since the world began. Jesus Christ, having the Spirit of God upon him, spake plainly. Paul says, we use great plainness of speech; and when men learn to speak as plainly as the Scriptures speak, then the people will understand the reading. Ezra and his companions caused the people to understand, by using such language and such similitudes as the people were acquainted with, and in this way they understood the will of God to man. It is a very wicked thing to tell the people that the Scriptures are dark, because it is declared by the Spirit of God that the law is a light, and the commandment a lamp; that the prophecies are a light shining in a dark place; that the entrance of the word giveth light and understanding to the simple.

I have long thought there was a more profitable way of preaching than what is now in fashion, and of late am more than ever convinced that reading more Scripture, saying more upon many verses, and less upon one, is the best way of instructing people in the things of the kingdom of God.

Jesus Christ began at Moses and all the prophets, and expounded in order all things concerning himself. Paul expounded from morning till evening, and three Sabbath days reasoned out of the prophets, proving from Moses and all the prophets that Jesus was the Christ.

It is my determination to imitate the preachers of ancient times according to my abilities, by reading the Scriptures distinctly, giving the sense according to my understanding of it, that the people may understand the reading; and my brethren are invited to come into this way, for a while at least, and to try it long enough to know if this is the more excellent way.

Sometimes it is profitable to read one or two verses only, as Christ did in the synagogue of Galilee, (Luke 4: 18,) but this, for a general practice, is not so profitable as expounding many verses. Some say they have not a gift for expounding; true, for some called preachers cannot tell the meaning of one verse;—such are not preachers. There are many men who are exhorters, and not teachers; such ought to attend to that work. "He that teacheth, let him wait on teaching, and he that exhorteth, on exhortation." If every public man knew his place, and would keep it, much good would be done in the world by men who improve in public. The Lord has given the word, and O that a great company may be engaged in publishing it to the world, that thousands may come to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. Amen.—[Herald of Gospel Liberty. Published in Phil. 1813.]

Selected for the Crisis.

Extract from Dr. Nevins.

BRO. GRANT:—The following sensible and pithy article is from the pen of the late Wm. Nevins, D. D., pastor of a church in Baltimore. It is selected from his excellent work entitled, "Practical Thoughts," a work to me replete with interest. As I read the following, I thought it worthy of being transcribed for the Crisis, especially as the writer possessed most ardent piety and profound erudition; at least, so I should judge from his writings, as well as from the account given me by his personal acquaintance. Yours, B. MATHEWSON.

"DO YOU PAY FOR A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER?"

I was going to ask the question in another form. "Do you read a religious newspaper?" but then I reflected that many read a religious newspaper who do not themselves subscribe for one, they being in the habit of borrowing from their neighbors, and after sending and respectfully soliciting the loan of the paper before the family have read it, and not unfrequently keeping it a length of time greater than the golden rule will exactly justify.

Then I had like to have thrown the question into this shape: Do you subscribe for "a religious newspaper?" but it struck me all at once that some subscribe for a paper, but do not pay for it. I have heard this complaint made, and I have no doubt there is foundation enough for it. I, for my part, would advise such persons to take a moral newspaper, if they can find such a thing. That is the sort of paper they require. A religious newspaper is quite too far advanced for them. I don't know, and cannot conceive why these non-payers want to read a religious newspaper. I should suppose they would be satisfied with secular newspapers. I can imagine that they may desire, notwithstanding their delinquency, to know what is going on in the world, but why they should care to know how things go in the church, I cannot conjecture. What do those who do not give any thing for value received, want to know about revivals, missions, &c.? Here are persons who would starve editors, publishers, printers and paper-makers—the whole concern—into a premature grave! Who say, "Send me your paper," implying of course that they will send the money in return, yet never send it; and yet they want to know all about the progress that is making in converting souls to God, and what is doing among the heathen. Is not this strange, that having never learned as yet to practice the first and easiest lesson of honesty, they should wish to read every thing about godliness and vital piety! So I concluded to head the article, "Do you pay for a religious newspaper?" Do you, reader? If you do, continue to take and read, and pay for it; and be slow to withdraw your subscription. Give up many things before you give up your religious newspaper. If any one that ought to take such a paper does not, I hope that some one to whom the circumstance is known, will volunteer the loan of this to him, directing his attention particularly to this article. Who is he? A professor of religion? It cannot be. A professor of religion and not take a religious newspaper! A member of the visible church, and voluntarily without the means of information as to what is going on in that church! A follower of Christ, praying daily, as taught by his Master, "Thy kingdom come," and yet not knowing, nor caring to know, what progress that kingdom is making! . . . I am afraid this professor of religion does not love "the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob." Ah, he forgets thee, O Jerusalem!

But I must not fail to ask if this professor takes a secular newspaper. O, certainly he does! He must know what is going on in the world; and how else is he to know it? It is pretty clear then that he takes a deeper interest in the world than he does in the church; and this being the case, it is not difficult to tell where his heart is. He pays perhaps eight or ten dollars for a secular paper—a paper that tells him about the world; but for one that records Zion's conflicts and victories, he is unwilling to pay two or three! How can a professor of religion answer for this discrimination in favor of the world? how defend himself against the charge it involves? He cannot do it; and he better not try, but go or write immediately and subscribe for some good religious paper; and to be certain of paying, let him pay in advance. There is a satisfaction when one is reading an interesting paper, to reflect that it is paid for. But perhaps you take a paper and are in arrears for it. Now suppose you was the publisher, and the publisher was one of your subscribers, and he was in arrears to you, what would you think he ought to do in that case? I just ask the question. I don't care about an answer.

Love opening the Purse-Strings.

In one of our quiet rural districts, it has been for years my office to act as collector for the various objects of christian benevolence. As I have gone from house to house upon these errands of love, I have been of course alternately cheered and depressed; but never have I been more deeply interested than during the present week. The last family upon my list to be called upon, live in that pleasant valley across the river. Their neat white cottage, with its green blinds and snug out-buildings, tells of thrift and comfort; while both garden and orchard show that the farmer's labor meets an ample reward. I have never approached that thriving homestead without feeling that there certainly I ought to find liberal and cheerful givers. But instead of that, Mr. G——, the master of the house, always kept himself out of sight on these occasions; leaving word with his wife that "he did n't think much of these things, and had nothing to give." Mrs. G——, though not professedly a christian, always welcomed me. Yet, as she did not hold the purse-strings, she could only bestow a very moderate donation, and even this she gave me with great privacy.

But to-day the scene was changed. Mr. G—— met me at the gate, having evidently watched for my arrival. With great politeness he fastened my horse securely, and conducted me to the house, which he entered with me. I inquired for his wife; but when he had summoned her, he quietly took a seat beside her. After a little pleasant conversation I made known my errand; looking, I must confess, rather to Mrs. G—— than to her husband, to respond to my appeal. But with great alacrity he opened his purse, and handed me a generous sum; saying, as he did so, "This is my first contribution, Miss N——, to the cause you have presented, but I trust it will not be my last." Doubtless I looked the surprise and pleasure which I felt; for he immediately added, "I see you think this is a strange turn for one who has kept his money so tight as I have. But I hope, Miss N——, that I have lately become a new creature in Christ Jesus, and the love of God ought to open the purse-strings."—Amer. Messenger.
